Improvements and Need

IN a leading article of some weeks ago we drew attention to the improvement in the situation with regard to the numbers of student nurses training in England and Wales, and the apparent reduction in the wastage figures as compared with those given in the Report of the Working Party on the Recruitment and Training of Nurses. We have now received two papers which were presented recently by the Ministry of Labour and National Service to the National Advisory Council on the Recruitment of Nurses and Midwives. These suggest that the staffing position is improving also in the hospitals for the chronic sick and to some extent in those for mental or mental defective patients.

The Ministry have based the conclusions with regard to the staffing in the chronic sick hospitals on available information, such as the quarterly returns from June 1947 to March 1949, which give the number of staffed beds, the numbers and types of staff and whether they are full-time or part-time.

The chronic sick hospitals covered by these returns show a better percentage of occupied as against unoccupied staffed beds than did the former Public Assistance Institutions, while the number of beds said to be unoccupied for lack of nursing staff in 1949 was 4,456 or 8.2 per cent. of the total available beds, which compares with an overall average of 10 per cent. for all types of hospitals.

A sample test of the staffing position which was made in two regions, in the Midlands and London, showed an increase of 13 per cent. of staff in the Midland region, where the bed complement had decreased by 4.6 per cent.; and 21.6 per cent. in the London region, where there had been a bed increase of 1.3 per cent.

The ratio of trained staff to occupied beds as shown in the hospital returns, March 1949, was 4.9 per 100 beds, with a ratio of 24.4 of total staff per 100 beds. The proportion of male to female nursing staff has risen from 1 in 5.6 in June 1947, when there were 2,496 men to 11,569 women, to 1 in 4.6 in March 1949, when the figures were 2,407 and 8,766 respectively.

The Nursing Appointments officers throughout the country were asked to make special reports on the staffing of the chronic sick hospitals in their areas and the resume of these suggests that, in general throughout the country, with the exception of parts of Wales and Scotland, the staffing position has improved considerably, particularly in the cities and the larger towns. In one Liverpool Hospital it was considered that after the General Nursing Council's next assistant nurse assessment, the hospital's requirements of State-enrolled assistant nurses would have been met.

Some of the contributing factors to the general improvement are held to be the introduction of part-time schemes of employment, improved pay and conditions, increased numbers of domestic staff and orderlies, more facilities for assistant nurse training, the intensive courses for ex-service nursing orderlies, and the introduction of the three shift system of duty.

The chief shortages are still State-registered nurses, and assistant nurses, and in some cases it appears that shortage of trained staff limits the employment of the additional staff. The success of part-time schemes have varied considerably, and it is where carefully organized schemes have been introduced that the success has been greatest. Examples of the successful schemes are given: at Bradford, a part-time scheme had enabled five wards in one chronic sick hospital to be kept open, while at Cambridge, one hospital was staffed, except for two sisters, entirely by part-time staff.

In a similar survey of the position in mental hospitals and mental deficiency institutions, improvement is also shown though it is not quite so encouraging.

According to the hospital returns, the total occupied beds in both types of hospitals has increased from 202,769 in June 1947 to 210,855 in March 1949 and the nursing staff from 30,261, to 33,334 respectively.

The number of available beds closed for lack of nursing staff on March 31, 1949, was 5,344 in mental hospitals and 3,453 in mental deficiency hospitals, or 3.2 and 5.8 per cent. of the total available beds respectively, (for all types of hospital the percentage is 10 per cent.). In both types of hospital the staff increase has kept pace with the increase of patients. The proportionate increase has, however, been in the case of female staff, and a greater relative improvement in the ratio of patients to nurses on the female side than on the male side. The average ratio of patients per nurse is still higher on the female side being 6 to 8, as compared with the male 5 to 8.

From staffing figures from June 1947 and March 1949, a decrease of 249 full-time trained nurses was offset by an increase of 1,041 part-time trained nurses; the number of student nurses increased by 1,187, the majority being men, but the figures indicate a reversal of the steep downward curve that had been continuous since 1939. The wastage rate figures, though still high, are considerably better than the 82 per cent. estimated in the Working Party Report, being 35 per cent. of the women students and 33 per cent. of the men in mental hospitals, and 37 and 29 per cent. respectively in mental deficiency institutions.

Commenting on the general position, the reports from about half the Nursing Appointments offices suggest that there has been a slight improvement during the year. The remainder say that there has been little or no change. The difficulties put forward as preventing improvements are the low salaries of nursing orderlies as compared with ward orderlies, the unpopularity of mental nursing, lack of training facilities in some places, poor accommodation and lack of amenities and the location of some hospitals and institutions.

The most acute demand is for women student nurses. In almost every area there are some hospitals or institutions where the position is serious and there is little success in the attempts to relieve it.

The Ministry of Health have now sent to regional hospital boards and hospital management committees, a report of a subcommittee of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council, which was set up to consider the working conditions in mental hospitals, and to recommend measures to achieve full student status. The synopsis of this was published in the Nursing Times of December 10, page 1079. Although the Ministry points out that many of the recommendations cannot be carried out immediately, they will be a guide to those planning for improved mental nursing training and service, and should help to bring the mental nursing schools to a level more comparable with general nursing schools.

The figures given in the reports quoted show first how serious the situation still is in these types of hospitals, but if once improvement can be seen, the encouragement gained is an immense stimulus to further efforts. If one city, or town, or hospital can achieve such results, surely others can. Each area can play its part in improving the overall picture and ensuring its students and trained nurses the best opportunities and conditions possible, while they share in the task of giving the community the best service. It is hoped that a similar survey of the position in sanatoria will be available at a future date.

Typhoid and Chloromycetin

THE cause of the typhoid fever outbreak among the crew of the liner Mooltan which arrived in London last week has been traced to two carriers among the crew. There are now 11 confirmed cases and 9 suspected cases. The patients are being treated with chloromycetin, which comes from the streptomyces group and is given orally, in capsule form, with a dose of 50 mg. per kilogram body weight per day. Chloromycetin is an antibiotic and acts on the typhoid bacilli wherever they are present in the body. It was first given for typhoid in Malaya, in 1948, and was used in the typhoid outbreak at Crowthorne in Berkshire this year. The results there were remarkable as the temperature settled on the 4th day and the blood culture became negative on the second day after treatment and the stools only contained typhoid bacilli for 6 days. Chloromycetin is a synthetic preparation and is also effective in other diseases such as undulant fever, virus pneumonia, and typhus.

The College Education Fund

OVER £250 has been raised within the first few weeks of the setting up of the Nurses Council to take the first steps in launching the Education Fund of the Royal College of Nursing, (see Nursing Times, December 10, page 1073). The generous start of the fund, when £100 was promised by members in a few minutes at the last meeting of the Branches Standing Committee, has been followed by a number of other donations. These include a cheque from a member for the amount left over after paying the expenses incurred when attending the International Conference in Sweden for which she had received help. Branches have also been active for the Fund and this rapid response suggests that nurses themselves will have made a good start toward the target of half a million pounds by the time the public appeal is launched next year.

Norway and Christmas

THE beautiful Christmas tree which Norway has once again sent to us has brought crowds of Londoners to see it in Trafalgar Square. The floodlit fountains of the square and the sparkling tree with its star atop are a sight worthy of any Christmas, and many thoughts must have turned to Norway, the land of Christmas trees and winter snows, which so bravely endured all its sufferings during the last war. Miss D. C. Bridges, Executive Secretary of the International Council of Nurses, has spent Christmas week in Oslo as the guest of the Norwegian Nurses' Association whose President is Miss Elizabeth Ordrop. She will have been able to see some of the excellent work of the nurses in Norway, including the work of eradicating tuberculosis from the country. Nurses in many parts of the world will be pleased to know that Miss Bridges' address, given at the Conference last summer in Stockholm, on Outstanding Events in the History of the International Council of Nurses has now been published in a small booklet and can be obtained from the International Council of Nurses, 19, Queen's Gate, London, S.W.7, price 1s.

We wish our readers at home and overseas a Very Happy New Year

Whitley Statements

WE publish in our correspondence columns this week a letter similar to many others we receive from time to time from nurses who are well aware that their organization has sent forward proposals to the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council, but complain that time elapses and no recommendations are made. It is a recognized undertaking that, in negotiation, neither comments, criticisms, demands or promises are put forward by any of the negotiating parties while the matter in question is under discussion. As a result of the acceptance of this undertaking by the organizations representing nurses on the staff side of the Whitley Council it has seemed, too often in the past, as if no notice were being taken by the Whitley Council of the many pressing problems, or of their urgency. To reassure those concerned, who have gone to great trouble to think out and propose, through their organizations, acceptable and suitable proposals, and who have paid no insignificant sum to cover the expenses of representatives on a Whitley Council, the Staff side send a statement after their meetings to the organizations represented, to let them know what items have been under discussion so that the many different groups of nurses and midwives amongst their members know when their particular salaries and conditions are being discussed. When final agreement is reached between the Management and Staff Sides, the Ministry of Health authorises public announcement to be made through the wireless and general press, and it is a pity that an impression of withholding information should have been given by the comment in the Times of December 17. We hope this has been clarified by the letter from the chairmen of the two sides of the Council in the Times of December 23.

Research into Vaccination against Whooping Cough

IT has been found more difficult to immunize successfully against whooping cough than against diphtheria, and the Medical Research Council have been working for some time on the best kinds of vaccine to use to prevent whooping cough. This is a serious disease to the child population of this country, being responsible for 905 deaths in 1947 and 748 deaths in 1948. Dr. Pearl Kendrick has been invited here by the Ministry of Health as she has been a corresponding member of the Whooping Cough Immunization Committee of the Medical Research Council, and will now be able to take part in some of the investigations. Dr. Kendrick works for the Michigan Department of Health; she is the originator of one of the serums in use in this country, and has done a great deal of research into vaccination against whooping cough. As she was recently in Geneva, under the auspices of the World Health Organization, it was possible for her to come to this country to attend meetings of the Committee and to discuss field trials of whooping cough vaccine. Successful vaccination against this disease will do much to save lives among the infant population for about

Royal College of Nursing Elections

NOMINATIONS are due in January for candidates for the 12 seats on the Council of the Royal College of Nursing which fall vacant each year. The elected candidates serve on the Council for three years and they are nominated by members of the College. Nominations must be seconded and the consent of the candidate must be obtained. Those members of Council who are retiring may stand for re-election if they are nominated again. The country is divided into divisions for the election and, when nominating a representative, Branches and members might find it helpful to find out whether other Branches in the same division are making a nomination also, so that two candidates are not opposing each other for a single place in one of the divisions. when one of them might be nominated for election in Division A for nurses resident anywhere in England and Wales. Candidates who agree to nomination must of course be able to devote the necessary time to the monthly Council meetings, which take all day, and the various committees which are held during the month. Any member of the College can make a nomination; the names of the retiring Council members and detailed instruction for members overseas will be found on page 1165. The result of the election is announced at the annual meeting held in June, but the satisfactory result depends on wise nomination now, and in securing adequate support for those who are nominated.

London Hospital Carol Service

THE festival of the nine lessons and carols has now become one of the most loved forms of carol service throughout the country. The yearly broadcast of this service from King's College Chapel, Cambridge is well-known, and the reading of the lessons by different members of a community gives a feeling of oneness at this beautiful Christmas service. The choir of the London Hospital Music Society held a service of the nine lessons and carols on December 20. As in previous years, student nurses, trained nurses, medical students and resident staff, the Matron, Miss C. H. Alexander, and the House Governor, Captain Brierly, shared in the service by reading the lessons. The choir sang carols both well-known and less familiar, a very beautiful one of which was Eccard's When to the Temple Mary went. The congregation joined in all the traditional Christmas hymns so that everyone present took some part in the service. The cho r also sing carols in the hospital so that all the patients are able to hear the Christmas music.

Cirrhosis of the Liver and Alcohol

FOR more than 100 years, since Addison first made the suggestion, alcohol has been considered the chief, if not the only, cause of Cirrhosis of the liver. A very interesting article by Dr. Best and a number of colleagues at the Banting and Best Department of Med cal Research, University of Toronto, was published in the British Med cal Journal of November 5, with a leading article upon the subject of cirrhos s.

The f rst stage in Cirrhos's is fatty infiltration of the liver cells. Fatty distension of the cells interferes with their nutrition and causes fibrosis. The dietary factors affecting the fat content of the liver are classified as lipotropic and alipotropic, the former preventing, or removing, the latter enhancing deposition of fat in the liver. Choline is the most important of the lipotropic agents and cystin of the alipotropic. While carbohydrate and fat are both alipotropic as they increase the need for lipotropic agents to prevent an increase of fat. In the experiments, which covered a period of 6 months, fats were maintained on an adequate diet in which only the lipotropic factors were restricted. On this the fat content of the l ver rose on an average to 10 per cent.—when alcohol was added to the diet the average fat content rose to 20 per cent. and commencing fibrosis appeared in half the animals. In animals whose diets contained no additional calories corresponding to the alcohol no increase in fat or fibrous tissue was observed. If however the additional calories provided by alcohol in the first group were supplied to the second group in the form of sugar the results in the livers of the two groups were indistinguishable In either groups the lesions could be entirely prevented by increasing the intake of lipotropic agents. "In these experiments on white rats," the authors conclude, "there is no more evidence of a specific toxic effect of pure ethyl alcohol upon liver cells than there is for one due to sugar." The cause of cirrhosis is a shortage of lipotropic agents which should not occur on a well-balanced diet, but the dietary faddist and the alcoholic do not consume a well balanced diet.

Hyaluronidase By J. G. BATE, M.B.Edin.

FOR many years scientists have known of a substance, found in such places as snake venom, male sperm cells and pathogenic streptococci, which would, when introduced into connective tissues (such as subcutaneous tissue) render them much more than ordinarily permeable to fluids. About ten years ago it was found that the ability of tissues to allow the passage of fluids was governed by a substance called hyaluronic acid, which binds firmly together the cells forming that tissue. It was then realized that the increased permeability of the tissues which follows a snake bite (in which the poison spreads with alarming speed) or a streptococcal skin infection (the spreading lesion of erysipelas) was due to the liberation by the snake or by the streptococcus of a powerful chemical which broke down in advance of the poison the substance binding the cells together. This facilitated the diffusion through the tissues of the poison, to the detriment of the victim and the triumph alike of the snake or the streptococcus.

This substance, called hyaluronidase, has now been tamed in the service of man. Refined, standardized and prepared in a form suitable for injection into the body, its ability to facilitate the subcutaneous absorption of fluids is being exploited in paediatrics, among many other uses.

A dose of hyaluronidase injected into the delivery tube of a subcutaneous infusion at once speeds up the rate of flow to that of an intravenous drip, while the painful distension of the tissues associated with an over-rapid subcutaneous infusion not only is not increased, but disappears.

Thus with hyaluronidase, the subcutaneous instead of the intravenous route can be adopted for rapidly injecting saline, plasma or serum. Even blood has been given, sparing the doctor the difficulty of finding and opening a vein, and the nurse the worry of ensuring that the needle stays in place in the vein.

So successful has this new weapon proved, that in many children's hospitals it has become possible largely to abandon intravenous therapy in treatment of the dehydration which is a feature of such conditions as gastro-enteritis and pyloric stenosis. Doctors are watching with interest the progress of hyaluronidase in this and many other fields.

THE RISE OF THE GENERAL PRACTITIONER*

3—The Struggle for Recognised Medical Qualifications

This article brings the history of the general practitioner to the National Health Act of 1946. Right is John Simon, first Medical Officer of Health for the City of London; left is a modern general practitioner at work

By DUNCAN C. L. FITZWILLIAMS, C.M.G., M.D., Ch.M., F.R.C.S.

Surgeon to Mount Vernon Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington

QUITE early in the 19th century an enquiry had been held into the state of medical education in four Northern districts. This disclosed the alarming fact that out of 266 medical men in practice, only 68 had had any medical training whatever, the remainder had been brought up solely on the apprenticeship system, and were ignorant of the rudiments of anatomy, physiology, medicine or obstetrics. This deplorable state of affairs prompted the National Society of General Practitioners to petition the two Royal Colleges to unite with the Society of Apothecaries to form an examining board granting a national qualification to practice medicine in all its branches.

This was the beginning of a long and strenuous tug-of-war between the general practitioners headed and guided by the Society of Apothecaries, who were both desirous of reforms and progress, and the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons who feared some encroachment and curtailment of their ancient chartered rights and privileges, which had been conferred upon them years before in Tudor days. These two bodies for the next fifty years and more placed these considerations above any desire for the advancement or betterment of the profession of which they were the acknowledged leaders. Both Royal Colleges refused to have anything to do with any such scheme, but said that if the Society of Apothecaries cared to institute such an examination they would have no objection, so long as their own particular prerogatives were not encroached upon. During the next ten years they blocked no less than four Bills introduced into Parliament for the better education of the general practitioner.

The Apothecaries Act, 1815

The remarkable public interest aroused in the Fuller 'Old Q' case, and the desire for reform to which it drew attention, came just at the right time, and it was due to this wave of interest that at last the Apothecaries Act was passed in 1815. The general practitioners gallantly led by the Society, after whom the Act was named, had at last won their hard fought Waterloo just two months after the Duke of Wellington had won his famous battle.

The Act was passed, but it was not a satisfactory Act, and contained much that should have been left out; still it was a beginning, and it is the first step which counts. It incorporated much that the Society did not want, such as the right to search shops for adulterated drugs, and the right to prosecute irregular practitioners, always an unpopular as well as an unprofitable proceeding. The Board of Examiners all had to belong to the Society of Apothecaries, the Royal College refusing to have any part or parcel in the Act.

The Board of Examiners was appointed, but they had to tread softly and warily at first ; they were breaking new ground, were surrounded by difficulties and liable to meet strenuous resistance from vested interests whichever way they turned. They managed however to institute a good sound examination suitable to the times, and very much superior to anything the two Colleges were offering ; the Colleges only examined in their own subjects, the Physicians in medicine and the Surgeons in surgery. The Act laid down that there was to be a course of botany, materia medica, and chemistry, with two courses in anatomy, physiology, and the theory and practice of medicine ; six months had to be spent in attendance of a recognized hospital or dispensary, and a certain amount of Latin was required. The powers of the Act were not limited to the City and the seven mile radius but extended all over England and Wales. The Board of Examiners had no control over surgery or midwifery, the former being the prerogative of the College of Surgeons, as was the latter really though they did nothing about it, but of this we shall speak later.

Flaws in the Act

The House of Commons, in spite of the protests of the Society, had insisted on a five years' apprenticeship clause ; this complicated matters very much as the two Colleges did not demand any apprenticeship. In practice the Society had to turn a blind eye upon the clause. The Act, very stupidly, only allowed rejected candidates to appear for one more trial. Consequently if they failed a second time, the rejected candidate simply set up practice without the licence, he was much better trained than his neighbour who practised without any training at all.

As an immediate result of the Act, additional medical schools sprang up to prepare candidates for the new examination, which was the first comprehensive examination held in England. Four private schools appeared in London alone, in addition to the long established institution founded by William Hunter in Great Windmill Street, and the scanty amount of teaching which took place at the larger hospitals. In the Provinces the larger and more important towns such as Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool and Leeds all started medical schools to meet the requirements of this new innovation so that The Apothecaries Act did more for medical education than anything before or since.

But the Act entailed a vast amount of work by the Society. The schools had to be inspected and approved, the teachers licenced and recognized as suitable, the hospitals and dispensaries had to be sanctioned.

* The third part of an address given to nurses and medical staff of Mount Vernon Hospital, Northwood, Middlesex

In 1814, in the seven London hospitals, there were only 38 physician's pupils, by 1832 there were 376 in the same hospitals, as the result of the measures taken. The College of Physicians did not insist on the candidate producing evidence of a course of instruction before examination, the Society insisted on this in every case, and careful records were kept of every candidate.

In 1826 the Obstetrical Society of London appealed to the Royal College, and urged the necessity for special instruction to be given, and an examination held, in midwifery and the diseases of infants. They received characteristic replies from both institutions. The Physicians, who did not admit to their licence any who practised midwifery, replied that that department belonged wholly to the Surgeons. The Surgeons were still more explicit and stated that "not one woman out of a thousand required more assistance than what female attendants were able to afford", and added that "Queen Caroline was attended in all her labours by good Mrs. Draper without difficulty or misadventure. The Princess Charlotte was attended by a male practitioner, a member of the Royal College of Physicians—with a very different result! The princess had died obviously through mismanagement, but as the physicians did not admit among their numbers any who practised or knew anything about obstetrics, this can hardly be wondered at. The physician in question committed suicide. The whole thing was a lamentable affair. The average number of students at the seven London hospitals was 300, but not more than 50 of these attended any special lectures on obstetrics, yet five-sixths went into general practice.

On finding that both the Royal Colleges had turned a deaf ear to this appeal, the Society at once instituted a course of teaching in the subject and an examination both written and oral for their licence.

Scottish Opposition

After ten years the Society brought forward an Explanatory Bill to rectify and extend the powers of the former Act. They wished to allow candidates to present themselves as often as they liked for the licence instead of only twice as the old Act allowed, and in other ways improve the Act. They met with bitter opposition from the Scottish Universities. The Bill passed the Commons in face of opposition, but the House of Lords limited it to one year intending to reopen the whole question later. Edinburgh University tried hard to obtain exemption for their graduates, as their degree had a world-wide reputation, and was far superior to that of Oxford or Cambridge, both of which were already exempted. After the year had expired a Commission was appointed to investigate the relative merits of the Scottish Universities and the examination of the Society. This at once had a tremendous effect in improving the teaching throughout the English medical schools.

In 1828 the Society gave great assistance to the inception of the young medical faculty which afterwards became the London University. Two of the Court of examiners as well as the Society's Professor of Chemistry served on the active committee. In spite of the most strenuous opposition of the Royal College of Physicians, the University was founded with this medical faculty as its nucleus.

A Corrupt By-Law

The policy of the College of Surgeons at this time was to freeze out the private medical schools which competed with the embryo medical schools growing up at the hospitals. These all belonged to the staff of the Hospital, and they all had a financial interest in them, a state of affairs which lasted well into this century. They passed a by-law refusing to recognize any course of anatomy which was not given in the winter time. By this means they ruined those schools which only taught anatomy, those which taught other subjects as well managed to survive a little longer.

The Anatomy Acts were passed in 1832, after the public had been shocked by the revelation of the Burke and Hare trial, and the scandals of the resurrectionists. In 1815 there had been only eight schools of anatomy, now there were twenty, of which twelve were in London and eight in the Provinces. The supply of bodies to meet the ever-increasing demand of the growing medical schools from now on was regulated by law, and the horrid trade of the resurrectionists came to an end.

As typical of the attitude of the leaders of thought in the medical profession of that day, we may take that of Wakley, the editor of the Lancet, the leading medical journal of those days, who, in his forceful vituperation and bitter opposition to every reform the Society advocated, used to refer to them as "The Old Hags of Rhubarb Hill," a quotation from the celebrated poem by Sir Samuel Garth, entitled "The Dispensary."

Privilege versus Reform

From the year 1834 onwards Bill after Bill was introduced into Parliament by the Society for the improvement of the profession, but most of them were blocked either by the Royal Colleges, always jealous for their out-of-date privileges, or by other licencing bodies, or by squabbles among the general practitioners themselves. They make melancholy reading.

A select Committee was eventually appointed under the chairmanship of Warburton to investigate matters. This investigation lasted over a period of years, but the Government fell before it had finished, so its findings were never published. Nevertheless reports appeared from time to time. From these it is seen what universal praise was given to the work done so far by the Society. This came from Sir Henry Halford, President of the College of Physicians, from Guthrie, President of the College of Surgeons, and from Sir David Barry, who said that the Society's examination was infinitely better than those of either of the Royal Colleges, which were exceedingly imperfect.

Sir Astley Cooper was even more emphatic and stated: "I do very much attribute to the Apothecaries Bill, which enforced examination, the great improvement which the general practitioners have undergone in the last 18 or 20 years." Ridout, one of the Board of Examiners, on behalf of the Society, pointed out how the curriculum had gradually been expanded and enlarged, that in 1815 only six months' hospital or dispensary practice had been demanded, now 24 months' hospital or 27 months' dispensary attendance were required. The lectures too had been increased in numbers and in variety.

In October, 1834, the Houses of Parliament were burned and most of the Scottish evidence was lost so that no comparison between the two systems of examination was possible.

More Reaction

Still further reforms were desperately agitated for by the Society and the general practitioners. Warburton proposed two bills, Lamb another two; all failed or were blocked. Sir James Graham, the Home Secretary, introduced four separate bills. But he drew his information from the Medical Baronets, court physicians and medical celebrities of that day, who had hitherto opposed all reforms, but now evinced a desire to share in what they thought were to be the spoils. These persons, familiar as they doubtless were with the mansions of the rich, were utterly ignorant of the requirements of the general practitioner or the problems of the poor. Graham's bills were howled down by the profession at large. The only people he did not consult were the Society of Apothecaries who had been responsible for all the progress made so far.

At last, it was decided to petition for the institution of a third college to be called the Royal College of General Practitioners, headed by the Society of Apothecaries. This looked like being successful, as the profession for the moment seemed to be unanimous. The Society demanded a register of all medical men, and that others, not necessarily members of the Society of Apothecaries, should be appointed to the Board of Examiners. They also, very altruistically stated that they would willingly retire from their position of being the guardians of a large part of the profession, and relinquish all their powers and privileges, if a stable board was set up devoted to the improvement and education of the profession.

Just when things were apparently about to succeed, a large number of practitioners broke away, and all the licencees of the College of Surgeons went off on the trail of trying to reform the affairs of their own college before they attempted to consider that of the profession. They wanted some say in the management of the College. They were not successful in their efforts, and they have none at the present day. The whole scheme for the formation of a third College fell through. Sir James Graham abandoned his effort in despair, and no one can blame him.

This hopeless wrangling continued until the College of Physicians called a conference of all the licensing bodies to consider medical reform, and what was termed the Great Medical Bill, in contradistinction to another bill which was termed the Small Medical Bill. This conference the College of Surgeons refused even to attend as they were fearful of their position being encroached upon ; in the end the College of Physicians refused to support the Bill either—on the ground that alphabetical registration, which was included in the Bill, would suggest an equality in all those admitted to it, a position which they could not tolerate, for some kept open shop and sold drugs !

A Landmark

Failing to obtain by Parliamentary means any advance in medical education, the Society of Apothecaries determined to act without it. They therefore introduced something quite new, which was a preliminary examination in arts, latin, Greek and Mathematics, to be taken at any time during the course, but the earlier the better. The only advantage this had was to excuse the candidate from taking Latin in the final examination. It could be objected to by no one, as it was purely voluntary. The first examination was held in October, 1851 ; it was a landmark in medical education. It speaks highly for the genuinness of the desire for reform and betterment on the part of the general practitioner to record that 93 candidates presented themselves for examination, of which 69 passed. After this it became an ordinary feature of the examination.

Sir George Gray, another Home Secretary, tried his hand at meeting the requirements of the profession, but his bill was opposed and dropped. Wakley then introduced two bills, both were abandoned. So the bickering, quarrelling and opposition continued until almost in desperation there was some coordination between the Minister, Cowper, afterwards Cowper-Temple and Lord Mount-Temple, and an able administrator, John Simon. The latter was a surgeon of St. Thomas's Hospital, and the first Medical Officer of Health ever appointed for the City of London. He was already on the General Board of Health. Through the influence of these two men the General Council of Medical Education and Registration for the United Kingdom came into being. This became known as the General Medical Council, to which we owe all the progress that followed.

The moving spirit was John Simon whose personality dominated the Council. On the Council were represented all the 19 licensing bodies of the Kingdom, together with six persons nominated by the Crown. It was this multiplicity of licensing bodies and their jealousies which had hampered progress in the past.

Shocking Statistics

The unsatisfactory state of the profession when the General Medical Council took office may be gathered from the following facts. More than one-fifth (1,524) of the 7,464 members of the College of Surgeons, possessed no second title, since the College only examined in surgery, they might have no knowledge or training in medicine, midwifery, or pharmacy, while 879 out of the 6,784 licentiates of the Society of Apothecaries, though their's was now the best diploma obtainable in England, had no guarantee that they had any knowledge of surgery, as they had never taken the examination of the College. Both these categories practiced in all three subjects.

Most of the titles to practice issued by the different bodies in these Islands only had a local value. The diplomas of the English and Irish Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons did not entitle their members to practise in Scotland. The Physicians of England and Edinburgh could not practise in Dublin. The Scottish and Irish general practitioners could not practise legally in England. The English apothecary could not practise as such in Ireland. Physicians could practise in Manchester, Liverpool or Oxford and Cambridge, but not in London. Physicians and Surgeons of Edinburgh and Glasgow could not extend their practice from one city to the other. To rectify this chaos Simon laid down five principles to be aimed at :—

1. That qualified men be legally defined, and only such hold public appointments or be able to recover fees at law.
2. That an annual Register be kept.
3. That persons convicted of infamous conduct should have their names erased from the Register.
4. That it be an offence for anyone " falsely to assume the title implying he was legally qualified."
5. That legally qualified men could practice unhindered in any part of the United Kingdom.

The General Medical Council had to go warily at first, and only gradually were the vested interests and ancient privileges of the different bodies ironed out, and the profession made to assume the guise which it bears today. As late as 1881 a Royal Commission was congratulating them on their work and said " It is to the General Medical Council that the universal adoption of a preliminary examination for intending medical students is mainly due." The Commission seemed quite obvious that such a regulation had been put in force by the Society of Apothecaries in 1851, just thirty years before. Nevertheless by 1869 they had improved the general education of students, promoted a better system of professional examinations, and included examinations of a more practical and clinical character. They had also instituted regular visitations of examinations and enlarged the curriculum. Up till 1886 they had not been able to insist on a complete qualification in medicine, surgery and midwifery as a condition for admission to the Medical Register, nor had the visitor to the examination yet produced anything like a single standard among the 19 independent licensing bodies.

Complete Qualification

It was by the Medical Act of 1886 that a complete qualification was required for admission to the Medical Register, and the opposition of the licencing bodies to one another was eventually stilled. By this time the qualification had been extended to allow practice all over the British Empire.

Under the quiet but firm mastership of the profession conferred on the General Medical Council by Act of Parliament, medical politics and inter-school rivalries gradually lost their attitude of selfish individualism which hitherto had been their greatest handicap. All were now on an equal footing. The Council set itself to raise the standard of teaching in all and to bring about more or less a common standard of excellence in all the examining bodies. Soon the two Royal Colleges of England came together and agreed to confer a common qualification the L.R.C.P. and the M.R.C.S., which combined all the needed essentials for admission to the Medical Register.

This qualification was intended to supplant the qualification of the Society of Apothecaries. But the Society obtained an Act of Parliament permitting them now to include surgery and recognizing their licence. This was only fair to the body of men who had done so much, during the last sixty years, to advance the standard of medical education. The two qualifications now exist side by side, though that of the Colleges has rather eclipsed that of the Society. Both are of an equal standard, but the examinations of the Society are held more frequently than those of the Colleges, though failure refers the candidate for the same time as in the Colleges. Both fulfil very definite requirements.

All three institutions, the Royal Colleges of the Society, have long been on the most friendly terms. On the Court of Assistance of the Society of Apothecaries at the present moment are three Presidents of the Royal College of Surgeons, the College of Physicians is strongly represented, alongside of the general practitioners who have always formed the backbone of the institution.

The Panel Act

From now on the general practitioner developed without any great opposition from anyone till the present day. The only matter which ruffled the conduct of the profession to any extent was the introduction of the Panel Act by Mr. Lloyd George in 1911, which met with vigorous opposition from certain sections. After it had existed for three years, there was hardly a person in that service who did not bless it.

Lately a revolutionary Act has been passed, the National Health Service Act. It met with the same, apparently unanimous opposition, which those who remembered the Panel Act, fully recognized was merely talk and would come to nothing. The so-called negotiators for the profession, not having the vaguest knowledge how to negotiate, allowed the politicians to walk round them as they pleased.

The Act has excellent qualities but needs many alterations and qualifications before it can run as smoothly as is hoped—nor can we suppose that the Treasury is satisfied. Human nature being what it is, will find far too many avenues at present open through which the Act can be exploited.

Meanwhile the profession has almost forgotten the great fight extending over half a century, that the Society of Apothecaries put up on behalf of the profession, or what it owes to its untiring efforts. Those who have not visited the old Institution should make a point of doing so. The old Hall still stands as one of the few City Halls which escaped the Blitz, though devastation came right up to its walls, but the 500 lbs. bomb which came through its roof, luckily failed to explode. The Societies' buildings are among the finest medical monuments still surviving and still in full use.

CARCINOMA OF THE BOWEL —A Case History

By Miss M. E. JUDD, S.R.N., S.C.M., formerly Sister at St. Mark's Hospital, London

THE following history is taken from the files of St. Mark's Hospital, and concerns a male patient, who after a very protracted convalescence, left the hospital to continue recovery at a convalescent home.

On August 18, 1948, a male patient was admitted to the wards of St. Mark's Hospital, giving a history of rectal bleeding, accompanied by bouts of diarrhoea, since having dysentery in 1922. He reported that on July 10, 1948, he had a fairly severe rectal haemorrhage; he had also lost weight and felt "run-down." He was complaining of pain in the lumbo-sacral region of the spine.

On examination the patient was found to weigh 20 stone; he was very obese. There was traumatic cataract of the left eye which was proptotic. The condition of the teeth was fair. Nothing abnormal was detected in heart or lungs. Sigmoidoscopy revealed a carcinoma of the lower third of the bowel, and a biopsy was taken. Blood pressure was 170/100.

For Surgical Treatment

Routine preparation was begun as follows. Blood, 5 c.cs. was taken for full blood tests. A specimen of urine was sent for pathological examination. The patient was encouraged to carry out deep breathing exercises. On the first, third, and fifth evenings an enema saponis was given. The result on the first evening was constipated, and the other two results were good, normal ones. On the second, fourth, and sixth evenings rectal washouts were given until clear, and the final washout was given high. During this six-day period the patient was given phthalylsulphathiazole, 5 g. twice daily, Vitamin C., 1000 mg., twice daily on the first day and 500 mg., twice daily on each of the following days until the day of operation. Vitamin B1, 3 mg., was given twice daily, also Fersolate, gr. 10, twice daily. Pronutrin was given in Bovril until the day of operation.

Above right : Duke's apparatus for intermittent irrigation of the bladder ; the nurse is releasing the tubing clip to allow the solution to flow into the bladder

Below : irrigation of the perineal wound

The pathological reports had been received and were as follows: All urine tests were negative; biopsy showed an average grade of malignancy; the blood urea was 26 mg., the haemoglobin 94 per cent.: the blood group was B, and the plasma protein was 7 mg. per 100 c.c.

Full diet was given daily until the day preceding operation, when light diet was given, and on the day of operation at 6 a.m. a flatus tube was passed; phthalylsulphathiazole, 10 g. was given, and a cup of tea with glucose. At 8 a.m. the skin was prepared with iodine (from diaphragm to knees, back and front. An intravenous saline drip was commenced in the right arm. A catheter was passed and tied in situ. At 8.30 a.m. an injection of Omnopon, gr. ½, with scopolamine, gr. 1/150, was given hypodermically. At 9 a.m. the patient was taken to the theatre. Synchronous combined excision of the rectum was performed under a general anaesthetic. At 11 a.m. the patient's condition was poor. The operation was very difficult owing to his size. Loss of blood was quite heavy and two pints of blood were given in the theatre.

Immediate Post-operative Care

At 12 midday, the patient was received back in the ward into a well-warmed bed. The foot of the bed was placed on blocks and an air ring placed under the buttocks. A urethral catheter was connected to a Duke's apparatus. The intravenous drip was running satisfactorily. The patient's pulse rate was 110, the volume being poor; he was unconscious, "chesty" and cyanosed, and oxygen was given. At 1 p.m. the condition was poor with haemorrhage from the perineal wound; the patient's blood pressure was 65/40, and one pint of blood was given. An intravenous adrenalin drip, 6 c.c. was commenced in the left leg. The patient's pulse rate was 130, and the volume poor. A pulse chart was recorded half-hourly. Blood pressure was taken, and charted 2-hourly.

By 3 p.m. the patient had slightly improved, and his colour was better. His pulse rate was 110 and the volume had slightly improved; blood pressure was 100/50. The intravenous drip of adrenalin was switched off but left in situ. At 5 p.m. the patient's condition was still improving; his pulse rate was 100, and the volume fair, the blood pressure being 105/50. His colour had improved and the oxygen was discontinued. At 7 p.m. his condition was much improved; his pulse rate was 110 to 100 and the volume fairly good. There was no further bleeding from the perineal wound. At 10 p.m. his pulse rate was 100, and the volume fairly good; blood pressure 110/60, and morphia gr. ¼ was given. The patient's colour was fairly good. The bed was taken off blocks.

The patient slept fairly well. At 2 a.m. his pressure areas and mouth were treated, and his calf muscles massaged. The adrenalin drip was dismantled. He was placed in Fowler's position; his pulse rate was 100, the volume fairly good, and his colour was also fairly good. There was no further bleeding from the perineal wound. Morphia, gr. ¼ was repeated. The patient rested well until 8 a.m., when his temperature was 98°F., pulse 100 and respirations 26.

Intravenous Therapy

On August 24 at 8 a.m. the patient was sponged down. His mouth and pressure areas were treated, and a warm bladder washout was given. When the urine was tested, chlorides were found to be present. His intake for 24 hours was as follows: intravenous saline, 0.90 gm., 2000 c.c.; intravenous dextrose, 4.3. g. 2000 c.c.; and intravenous whole blood, 1620 c.c. His urinary output was 900 c.c. Sulphamethazine, 2 g. was added to each litre of fluid. Intramuscular injections of penicillin, 20,000 units were commenced and given three-hourly.

The next day the patients' general condition was fairly good; the half-hourly pulse rate chart showed variation between 80-110, and the volume was fairly good. His mouth was treated, and frequent mouthwashes given. The abdomen was not distended, the catheter was draining, and the intravenous drip was running satisfactorily but was restricted owing to the chest condition. Sips of water were given. Sulphamethazine, 1 g., was inserted into each litre. Penicillin was continued three-hourly. The intake of intravenous dextrose was 4.3 gms., 2,000 c.c. The patient's urinary output was 90 c.c. fluid intake, orally, was 200 c.c. The patient's temperature was 99°F., his pulse 88 and respirations 26.

Gastric Suction Started

On August 26, the patient complained of some nausea and hiccoughs were persistent. An oesophageal tube (size 8) was passed and attached to continuous suction as it was thought that the ileus might be paralyzed. Dark coffee coloured fluid was withdrawn. The tube was removed from the perineal wound and the wound irrigated with hydrogen peroxide (20 vols.) two pints followed by Milton, two and a half per cent., 2 pints. A Milton gauze flat dressing was inserted. The sutures were treated with spirit. The pressure areas were treated and the leg muscles massaged and movements encouraged. Deep breathing exercises were performed every four hours. The colostomy had not acted and the patient's abdomen was distended. Urine was draining well; this was tested, and chlorides were present. The patient's temperature was 98°F, his pulse 100, and respirations 22. His intake of intravenous saline was 1000 c.c., and of dextrose, 2000 c.c. His output of urine was 390 c.c. and his gastric contents, 3,670 c.c. Sulphamethazine 1 g. into each litre was continued, and intra-muscular injections of penicillin were continued.

The next day the patient's abdomen was still distended, his condition was not so satisfactory. The ileus was still paralyzed and the suction still in progress. Mouth and pressure areas were treated. Fluids were taken by mouth. There was some sloughing of the perineal wound (due to the patient's weight); the wound was treated as previously. Deep breathing and leg movements continued. Sulphamethazine, 1 g. was given in each litre of fluid. Intramuscular penicillin was continued. His intake of intravenous dextrose was 4.3 g., 2,600 c.c., and of intravenous saline, .90 gms., 2,000 c.c. His oral fluid intake was 1,300 c.c. His urine output was 600 c.c. and his gastric contents 4,170 c.c. The patient's temperature was 98°F, pulse 88 and respirations 22.

Paralysed Ileus Recovers

On August 28 the patient's general condition remained the same. The ileus was still paralyzed and suction was still in progress. The perineal wound was treated as previously. The colostomy had not acted and the abdomen was still distended. Mouth and pressure areas were treated and exercises encouraged. Intramuscular injections of penicillin were changed to 200,000 units, twice daily, sulphamethazine was continued. His intake of intravenous dextrose was 1,200 c.c., and intravenous saline 1,400 c.c., his oral fluid intake was 2,040 c.c., urine output 2,310 c.c., and gastric contents 2.365 c.c. The patient's temperature was 98°F., pulse 100 and respirations 22.

The next day there was a slight improvement. Flatus was passed freely from the colostomy. The abdomen was still slightly distended. Mouth and pressure areas were treated four-hourly; the perineal wound was treated as before, and exercises were continued. The urethral catheter was removed, and the patient passed urine normally. The intravenous drip was still in situ. The patient's intake of intravenous dextrose was 1,300 c.c., and his oral intake was 3,069 c.c. His urine output was 2,910 c.c., and gastric contents, 1,115 c.c. Penicillin and sulphamethazine were discontinued. His temperature was normal.

The following day the patient's general condition was much improved. The colostomy acted slightly. The sutures were removed from the perineal wound which was irrigated with hydrogen peroxide and Milton, and a Milton dressing inserted. Mouth and pressure areas were treated. Exercises were continued. His intake of intravenous dextrose was 1,000 c.c. and his oral intake 4,150 c.c. The urine output was 3,255 c.c. and the gastric contents, 345 c.c. His temperature remained normal.

The next day his general condition was much improved. The colostomy acted well three times. The intravenous drip was discontinued and the oesophageal tube removed. The perineal wound was treated twice daily and the pressure areas four-hourly. Exercises were continued. Vitamin C., 500 mg. and vitamin B.1, 3 mg., were given twice daily. Fersolate gr. 10, was given. The patient's fluid intake was 2,550 c.c., and his output, 2 790 c.c. His temperature was normal.

On September 1, the patient's condition was good and the colostomy was acting well. The perineal wound was wide open, and the surrounding skin inflamed and oedematous; the wound was irrigated with hydrogen peroxide and Milton. Milton dressings were applied four-hourly. The pressure areas were treated. The patient was allowed up in a chair while his bed was made, with no ill effects.

The next day his general condition was still improving. The perineal wound was still inflamed and was treated four-hourly, as were the pressure areas. His temperature was elevated at 6 p.m., but he was not complaining of any discomfort. Intra-muscular injections of penicillin, 200,000 units were commenced twice daily. The patient was allowed to sit up in a chair at midday for bed-making. His fluid intake was 104 oz. and his output, 87 oz. He was now on a light diet, and the vitamins ordered were continued as routine.

Pulmonary Infarct Feared

The next day, September 3, he complained of pain in his left shoulder. His chest was examined with difficulty owing to the thick chest wall. There was no evidence of pathological condition. Possible pulmonary infarct was suspected. The perineal wound was treated with difficulty also the pressure areas; the colostomy acted. Penicillin, 200,000 units was given twice daily. His fluid intake was 112 oz. and his output, 76 oz. Routine vitamins and a light diet were given. At 6 p.m. his temperature was 101°F. pulse 96, and respirations 24.

On September 4, the patient was still complaining of pain. A Kaolin poultice was applied to the chest; all nursing treatment was continued. A chest X-ray examination was made, but nothing abnormal was seen.

The following day he complained of pain in his right calf and the pain in his chest persisted. Intravenous injections of Heparin, 5,000 units were given at 10 a.m. and 4.30 p.m. Clotting time was 25 minutes. The perineal wound was not treated in case of haemorrhage. Penicillin, 200,000 units were given twice daily. His temperature was normal.

On September 6, the patient's general condition remained the same. An intravenous injection of Heparin, 4,000 units, was given at 9 a.m. and 4,000 units, at 12.30 p.m. Clotting time was 5-10 minutes. 4,000 units of Heparin were given intravenously at 9 p.m. The perineal wound was not treated. The patient took a full diet well. His temperature was normal.

Improvement

The next day his condition improved and he was not complaining of any pain. The upper end of the perineal wound was undermined, and sloughing, the gangrenous tissue was exercised; the slough extended into the gluteus muscles mainly on the right side. The wound was dressed with zinc-peroxide cream. The next day the perineal wound was much cleaner; more slough was removed and bleeding vessels ligatured. Heparin was discontinued because of the condition of the perineal wound and the possibility of haemorrhage. The following day the perineal wound was still improving. The patient's general condition was much improved. He was allowed to sit up in a chair while his bed was made.

On September 11, the perineal wound was much cleaner, and the patient sat up in a chair for one hour. A blood transfusion of 2 pints was given, and extra milk and stout were given. The general condition continued to improve, the perineal wound was clean and on September 13 it was irrigated and aloio rubra dressing inserted. The patient was now up and walking around.

The next day he got up to a bath with no ill effects. The perineal wound was granulating and clean. Haemoglobin was 58 per cent. On September 15 the wound was healing; a blood transfusion of 2 pints was given. On September 16 haemoglobin was 62 per cent.

Discharged for Convalescence

On September 27 the colostomy was trimmed under local anaesthetic. The patient's condition was good, he was up for most of the day. On October 25 a naevus was removed from the dorsum of his left foot. His condition was good. The perineal wound was healing fast. On November 1, the sutures were removed from his left foot. His weight was now 19 stone.

On November 10, the patient was discharged to a convalescent home. The perineal wound had healed, the colostomy was acting twice daily, and his general condition was very good.

DISPLACED PERSONS

A Report on the Nursing Services in the British Zone of Germany for people who are unable to return to their own countries

By MONICA E. BALY, S.R.N., S.C.M., R.F.N., Health Visitor's Certificate

THERE are still in the British Zone of Germany some 128,000 displaced persons, people, who for reasons of security or political conviction are unwilling or unable to return to their country of origin. These people were collected into camps by the military forces and by UNRRA when Germany surrendered in 1945. Many were immediately repatriated, and many, who did not wish to return to their own country, have since been resettled in the Colonies and other European countries by the International Refugee Organization. Resettlement of such a heterogeneous community is necessarily slow, partly because of shipping space, but mainly because of the very careful selection demanded by countries accepting displaced persons for resettlement.

In the meantime, the Control Commission Government administers the day to day care of the displaced persons in the British Zone. To deal with this problem, a special Division known as Prisoners of War and Displaced Persons Division (later shortened to Displaced Persons' Division) was established. This Division is responsible for the care and welfare of the displaced persons in the British Zone.

Decentralized Administration

Since the area of the British Zone amounts to 60,000 square miles and the camps are very scattered, administration must necessarily be decentralized. This has been done by dividing the zone into areas with their own administrative headquarters, rather in the way England is divided into counties, urban and rural districts, all ultimately responsible to Whitehall.

The British Zone, like all Gaul, is divided into three Regions corresponding to the German Laender, Schleswig Holstein in the North, Niedersachsen in the Centre and North Rhine/Westphalia in the south west. Hansestadt Hamburg is an autonomous Laender, but for the purposes of this Division comes under the administration of Schleswig Holstein.

The Regions are in turn divided into Relief Detachments, each with a central headquarters which administers all the camps within the Detachment. For convenience the camps are again "grouped" into Assembly Centres and, each Displaced Persons Assembly Centre has its own office, dealing with the day to day running of one or several camps.

A lecture given in the garden at the Public Health Course, Hanover

A typical group of displaced women and children. There are many unhappy faces amongst these people, who are sometimes able, but unwilling for reasons of security or political conviction, to return to the country of their origin

Obtaining adequate accommodation presents a great problem as Northern Germany is so devastated. Camps may consist of a collection of huts, old German barracks, schools or factories varying in capacity from a few hundreds to several thousand people.

A Variety of Problems

From the nursing point of view the displaced persons present all the problems to be found in any community living under abnormal conditions. This is further complicated by the problem of mixed nationalities with their concomitant customs and traditions. "Swaddling clothes" is but one custom that presents a medical problem—at least to Western eyes.

As far as possible the Medical Service is formed from doctors and nurses who are themselves displaced persons, with the minimum of British supervision. At the beginning of the operation there were sufficient highly qualified nurses among these displaced persons to undertake the nursing supervision and administration in the Relief Detachments, and there were British nurses at Regional and Zonal level. However, with the world-wide shortage of nurses the senior nurses among the displaced persons were among the first to resettle, and there are now only 84 graduate nurses in the British Zone. This number is, of course, quite inadequate to meet the nursing commitments, so British nursing officers have been recruited to fill administrative positions in the Relief Detachments during the last eight months, and German graduate nurses to work in the camps and Assembly Centres.

The recruitment of German nurses presented many difficulties. Firstly there was the problem of national feeling. Germans were resented by many displaced persons, and, in any case, there is always the language difficulty. Most of the displaced persons now speak German, but those who do not are often those most in need of advice.

Health Visitors Urgently Needed

Secondly, our urgent need is not for the bedside nurse, for sick patients are usually nursed in a German hospital in which this Division merely has a watching brief. The great need is for public health nurses to do home-visiting, organize clinics, and, above all, to spread health propaganda in the camps. German nurses train on the Motherhouse System, which means that after a training of 2-3 years they join a "Verband" which organizes their deployment into its own hospitals. One of the main differences between this system and the British Nightingale System is that the matron is not in supreme charge of the nurses. In many instances the chief doctor and the Church have a considerable control of the nursing staff and their conditions of service, therefore the German nurses are not free to administer their own affairs. Moreover, there is no training in Germany resembling our Public Health Course. There are "district" nurses and welfare workers who are not nurses, but infant welfare centres and regular home visiting are not common features.

Formulating a Syllabus

To overcome this difficulty we have started our own public health course in Hanover. Every assistance in the recruitment of German nurses has been given us by the Land Matrons of the various Verband, and guidance on the formation of the syllabus was given by the Royal College of Nursing. Every six weeks we take in twenty graduate nurses as students, both displaced persons and German nurses together. Lectures are given on maternity and child welfare, hygiene, school health, communicable diseases, tuberculosis and methods of teaching. Two days per week are devoted to practical work in the camps, and a certain amount of time is devoted to the very necessary teaching of administration. The lectures are mainly given by British and displaced medical and nursing officers, either in German or through the sister tutors as interpreters. The sister tutors consist of the two Miss Kurriecks from Estonia and Miss Nielson who was the German matron for the Social Ministry in North Rhine. All three are "Old Internationals" and have a real kinship in this respect. In fact we often have enough nationalities at the Course to hold our own "International Conference."

So far we have run five such Zonal Courses and the effect is beginning to be manifest in the camps. Although the primary reason for the course is to improve the standard of public health in the camps, we do feel that by so training German nurses we will leave behind the seeds of public health training which we hope will one day be translated into a scheme of their own.

Practice and Group Teaching

In particular there has resulted an unexpected enthusiasm for "group teaching" by the nurses in the camps. "Practice Teaching" is part of the training school syllabus, and, although the students at first regard the idea with horror many of them respond with confidence and initiative, especially in producing teaching material from apparently nowhere.

When you go into a camp and hear a nurse, one of your "ex-students," telling a mother of the dangers of wrapping mackintosh round a baby in hot weather, and driving the shot home with: "Would you wear a mackintosh this afternoon?" you realise just how far the ripples of teaching can spread. Words used by a lecturer at the Royal College of Nursing in London some years ago, translated into German and delivered to a Polish peasant woman to-day!

We hope that the displaced persons will soon be resettled as far as it is humanly possible, and, that they will take to their countries of resettlement happy memories of help and advice given at clinics and in their houses. If only a few have learnt the need for open windows and have abandoned the use of the dummy or realized the danger of flies, the nursing service here will not have worked in vain.

Nursing Officers of St. John

At a conference of nursing officers of the St. John Ambulance Brigade, an appeal was made for more nursing officers. Lady Dunbar Nasmith, Deputy Superintendent-in-Chief, Nursing Corps and Division, said that in some divisions there were twice the number of doctors to trained nurses. Miss Cockayne, Chief Nursing Officer of the Ministry of Health, discussed the Brigade's relationship to the National Health Service and she said that she was sure that the shortage of nursing officers was due to ignorance on the part of trained nurses. She went on to say how important it was that the voluntary spirit be allowed to develop still further. Few of us had any spare money but we could all give service, and service was still able to exert a considerable influence on the lives of many, although people were inclined to say that voluntary workers were not needed now. This was not true and without voluntary work the health service could not continue. Nursing officers had very wide opportunities for work in health education and preventive measures. They should try to present to their brigade not only the dramatic side of nursing, such as that seen in the theatre or accident case, but the nursing needs of the whole community. Miss Cockayne said tnat an effort was being made to have more visiting days and more people to come and read to patients and to take them out. The members of the St. John Ambulance Brigade could put forward the viewpoint of recovery, and they were a human connection with the life that went on outside the hospital.

PREVENTING DEFORMITY—

IN the Medical Rehabilitation Unit, of the Royal Free Hospital, Grays Inn Road, London, a new development in the prevention of ulnar deviation in rheumatoid arthritis is being carried out with great success today. This technique has been evolved by a team comprising the medical officer, a nurse and the physiotherapists, over a period of years. It is easy to apply and comfortable for the patient. It supercedes the old cumbersome form of splint which women patients objected to as they were ugly.

Today the patient has a light Perspex splint, which is neat, and allows normal use of the hand ; it can be taken off easily for washing, etcetra, as the patient desires.

As each patient has to be fitted with his own splint, a plaster cast is made of the hand; then a strip of Perspex, an inch wide, is warmed to soften it. This is usually done in the hospital kitchen ovens which adjoin the unit. The strip is wound round the cast. When it is cool it retains its shape, although it has a springiness which allows it to be taken off or put on easily. The usual thickness of the strip is $\frac{1}{16}$ of an inch, and after moulding, the edges need smoothing. These splints are made between clinics, and are as little trouble to prepare and apply as an ordinary dressing.

THE COLLEGE COUNCIL MEETS

DECEMBER 1949

AT the December meeting of the Council of the Royal College of Nursing, Mrs. A.A. Woodman, M.B.E., Chairman, alluded with deep regret, to the death last month of Lord Rushcliffe. Members of Council stood in silence in tribute to his memory, and the following resolution was adopted: "The Council of the Royal College of Nursing wish to place on record the deep sorrow with which they learned of the death of Lord Rushcliffe, Chairman of the Rushcliffe Nurses' Salaries Committee, and a Vice-President of the College from 1944. Those who were privileged to work with him will not soon forget his skill in negotiation, acute judgment, unruffled calm and lively sense of humour. The nurses of this country will ever be grateful for the true statesmanship which he placed so ungrudgingly at the service of the profession."

Mrs. Woodman welcomed Miss M. B. Powell, on her first attendance at a Council meeting, following her appointment on the resignation of Miss M. E. G. Milne. It was agreed that Miss P. Loe be asked to continue to represent the College on the National Association for Mental Health. Good wishes were expressed to Miss D. E. Lloyd, a tutor in the Education Department, on her approaching marriage; Miss D. C. Graham had been appointed to the department on Miss Lloyd's resignation at the end of January.

It was announced that the following Council members were due to retire at the Annual Meeting in 1950:—

Division (a), Nurses resident anywhere in England and Wales.—Miss M. A. Dawson, Miss E. J. Merry, Miss P. R. M. Rowe, Miss G. M. Thackray.

Division (b), Nurses resident in Wales.—Miss W. M. Baugh.

Division (c), Nurses resident in the Northern Area of England.—Miss M. Jones.

Division (d), Nurses resident in the Midland Area of England.—Miss D. Brown.

Division (e), Nurses resident in the Southern Area of England.—Miss G. E. Collingwood.

Scottish Section.—Miss J. Armstrong, Miss M. C. Marshall.

Irish Section.—Miss M. B. Macintyre, Miss M. Sparkes.

Miss Lange, F.S.A.A., was appointed Returning Officer for the election.

Mrs. Woodman reported that the Nurses Bill had received the Royal Assent on November 25.

Concerning the National Council

The Cardiff Branch had written to ask that an extraordinary meeting of the Branches' Standing Committee should be called to discuss a resolution concerning the present position between the College and the National Council of Nurses, and the request had the support of 12 other Branches as is required under the Constitution. Council agreed that such a meeting would be valuable, and should be called at the appropriate moment.

Prolonged consideration was given by the Council to the material submitted by the special group which had been appointed to prepare suggestions to be used as a basis for discussion between the College and the National Council of Nurses. Council agreed that further efforts should be made in this direction.

With regard to the amendment forwarded to the International Council of Nurses by the National Council of Nurses on Article 6 of the Draft Covenant of Human Rights, Council members commented on the widespread feeling of concern expressed by members throughout the country on the inclusion of the latter part of the amendment, and their desire that the question should be referred by the National Council to its affiliated associations. Council agreed to request that the subject be reopened so that the affiliated associations could express their views.

The report of the finance committee which included the estimated budget for 1950, and proposals to meet the rising cost of the work of the College roused considerable discussion, and Council agreed that certain measures should be discussed with the Branches before decisions were reached. A grant, to a College member in need of a few weeks nursing, from the M. S. Rundle Benevolent Fund was approved.

Council was delighted to hear of Miss Clunas' safe return from her visit to Australia and New Zealand, and were appreciative for her kind gift towards the College funds.

Superannuation

With regard to the National Health Service (Amendment) Bill, it was reported that certain clauses in the Bill which was now before the House of Commons would affect nurses directly: Clause 13 dealt with the procedure to be adopted in the reference of disputes as to conditions of service of persons employed or engaged in the health services. Clause 18 empowered the Minister of Health to apply the superannuation benefits provided under Regulation 67 of the 1946 Act to the officers of disclaimed hospitals. Clause 19 allowed for the inclusion of medical and nursing staff employed by Government Departments under National Health Service Superannuation Regulations.

Though the above amendments would be beneficial to the nursing profession, they required careful consideration.

Council also discussed the possible means of obtaining insurance for nurses for their personal belongings now that the Ministry of Health circular H.M.C. (49) 107, had indicated that Boards and Committees should not in general accept liability for the loss of personal effects of members of their staff.

Representation Achieved

Council were very gratified that two nurses had been appointed to serve on the Dale Committee considering the industrial health service, as a result of the representations of the Council of the College and the practical sympathy and support particularly of Lady Davidson, of whose help the Council were most appreciative. The two nurses are Miss M. M. Edwards, M.V.O., Director of the Nursing Division, King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, and Miss E. M. Gosling, Principal Nursing Officer, Lever Brothers and Unilever Limited, Chairman of the Royal College of Nursing Industrial Nursing Sub-Committee.

The College had submitted 149 nominations for the National Insurance Local Advisory Committees being set up throughout the country.

Scholarships

The Education Department reported that a number of scholarships had again been offered for the following year. These were: The Cowdray Scholarship of £350 offered for the Session 1950-1951 for the Sister Tutor Course; two scholarships of £150 each offered by the Public Health Section for the Industrial Nursing Course; the Boots Scholarship of 150 guineas offered for a nurse to undertake research into the needs of old people in the home as related to the public health nursing team and domestic organizations, and the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and British Red Cross Society, and Hospital Saving Association scholarships as in previous years.

The Public Health Section reported that it had set up a Working Party to consider The Social Aspects of Health, and to assemble material to be submitted to the British National Conference on Social Work in Harrogate in April, 1950, and that the British Federation of Social Workers had invited the Section to contribute items for their Quarterly Bulletin of interest to other social workers.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Section would be held in the Cowdray Hall, on Saturday, January 14, and would include a Conference on The Future Training of the Health Visitor. The speakers being Dr. Fraser Brockington, Mrs. A. A. Woodman, M.B.E., Miss J. M. Calder, M.B.E., F.R.San.I., and Miss F. N. Udell, M.B.E. Miss M. M. West was to represent the Public Health Section at the Conference on People and Planning, to be held in February, 1950, organized by the British Social Hygiene Council.

The Scottish Board reported that a letter had been sent to the Secretary of State expressing regret that no consultation had taken place with trained nurses organizations and no information received regarding the plans for the National Hospital Service Reserve. The reply received had stated that early arrangements were made at short notice to coincide with arrangements regarding recruitment for Civil Defence, but the matter was to be discussed next with the Standing Nursing and Midwifery Committee. An Edinburgh Committee for the equal pay campaign was to be set up and Miss R. H. Pecker had been appointed to represent the Board.

The British Council was arranging another Course for International Nurses on The Nursing Profession in Scotland in June, 1950. Representatives of nursing including the Scottish Board of the Royal College of Nursing were planning a suitable syllabus.

The Sister Tutor Refresher Course had proved most successful Forty tutors attended full time and about eighty attended the evening discussions, and the course had been greatly appreciated.

Northern Ireland's £5,000

The Committee for Northern Ireland reported that the sum of £5,634 for the Northern Ireland Education Fund Appeal had been presented to the Patron, Her Excellency, Countess Granville. The money had been raised mainly by nurses in the Province. The Committee had also greatly appreciated the visit to Belfast of the President of the Royal College of Nursing, Dame Louisa Wilkinson, D.B.E., R.R.C., Council directed that a message of congratulation and appreciation be sent to the Northern Ireland Committee.

A meeting had been held at which representatives of the Association of Hospital Matrons, the Royal College of Nursing and the Society of Registered Male Nurses had met representatives of operating theatre technicians to discuss their position, together with Miss D. L. Thomas, Theatre Superintendent, the Middlesex Hospital, a surgeon, Mr. Holloway of Poplar Hospital, and an anaesthetist, Dr. Frankis Evans, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. A full discussion was held and a number of points clarified, and the meeting was adjourned for further discussion to take place at a later date.

A review of the five Nation's Nurses Conferences organized by the Royal College of Nursing during the year was received by Council who commented on the immense value of such conferences and congratulated those concerned with their organization.

The Nurses' Appeal Council

The first meeting of the Nurses Council of the Royal College of Nursing Educational Fund Appeal was reported and plans considered for further progress. Miss Yule, the Secretary of the Appeal Council had visited Oxford, Exeter, Norwich, Birmingham to meet representatives of the Branches, and those from the Eastern Area had met at the Royal College of Nursing.

New members joining the College in the past month numbered 175; the Student Nurses' Association membership was 18,636 and three new units had been formed.

Book Reviews

THE LAW RELATING TO HOSPITALS AND KINDRED INSTITUTIONS.—By S. R. Speller. (H. K. Lewis and Company Limited London ; price £2 2s. net.)

This is the second edition of a work first published in 1947, after the passing of the National Health Insurance Act (1946) but before the numerous Statutory Rules and Orders to be made under that Act had been made or published. It provides up-to-date information on all those matters of legal importance with which the Administrative Departments of Hospitals and kindred Institutions are concerned and which are also of interest to many who work in such institutions.

It therefore contains much new matter notably Statutory Instruments made under the Act and a great deal of new legislation, including the Penicillin Act (1947) and the Radioactive Substances Act (1948). A well set-out Contents and a good Index, two items which can make or mar a good book, enable one to appreciate quickly the wide scope of the work.

Since mental hospitals and institutions have been included in the hospital service of the National Health Insurance Act (1946) the author has been at some pains to include a chapter on persons of unsound mind and mental defectives, a great deal of which will be of interest to the nurse who engages upon this most difficult and onerous branch of the profession. Indeed this book deserves a place on the shelves of every library to which the nurse has access, for "Law For Nurses" an earlier publication by the same author is now incorporated in this larger work and there is much besides of special interest to the nurse whose attitude towards her work is that she can never know too much. For instance, the general principles of fiduciary relationships, that is, those of special trust, are here set out in language which the intelligent layman can understand. This is a subject upon which every nurse should be informed. Also I recommend the note on Artificial Insemination, a subject as the author explains, of little more than academic interest in this country at the present time, as far as human beings are concerned, but of undoubted interest to the nurse who might very well in the years to come meet the problem in private practice and be the better equipped if she has some knowledge not only of the social consequences but of the legal implications. Nurses should look for this work on the library shelves and study the Contents with care.

The book in the main is written for layreaders but provides also an interesting reference book for the lawyer. N.M.J.

THE HANDBOOK OF PARENTCRAFT.—By Leslie George Housden, O.B.E., M.D., (Eyre and Spottiswoode, Ltd., 15, Bedford Street, London, W.C.2 ; price 15s.)

The Handbook of Parentcraft is an excellent book which should be read—not as stated in the foreward "by all young women," but by all parents. It is full of sound, practical commonsense advice and if followed gives a daily routine which is possible in every home be it rich or poor.

The father or father-to-be should certainly read Chapters IX, X, XIV, and XXI which deal with The Child as a Personality, Home-making and The Preparation for Motherhood.

It seems a pity in a book such as this that Dr. Housden uses the word pain with regard to labour in Chapter XVII. Would it not be more fitting to introduce the public to contractions and so prove the way to the new outlook on labour as an act of joy and supreme fulfilment, not one of unpleasantness and pain ?

AIDS TO TRAY AND TROLLEY SETTING.—By Marjorie Houghton, M.B.E., S.R.N., S.C.M.D.N., London (Bailliere, Tindall and Cox, 7-8 Henrietta Street, W.C.2 ; price 5s.)

The fourth edition of this book in the Nurses' Aids Series has been brought up to date by the inclusion of a photograph of a newer type of artificial pneumothorax apparatus (Dr. Stott's) and a description of its assemblage, and by including such procedures as vulval swabbing, administration of intravenous, local or regional anaesthetics and tracheotomy dressing which were not included in previous editions.

The general lay-out remains as before with skilful photographs of trays and trolleys used for routine ward examinations and special examinations and treatments. It also includes a section on ward procedures such as local and general applications and special procedures such as venesection and lumbar puncture. It does in fact include almost all of the ward and departmental activities.

As methods vary slightly in different hospitals, pages have been left for the nurse to make her own notes. At the end it has a glossary of instruments in common use and here some of those which cannot be seen clearly in the preceeding photographs have been illustrated and explained.

This book is very clearly printed on excellent paper and it is indeed an excellent aid to knowledge both for nurses working in general wards or those working in out-patient departments.

SOMETHING TO READ, SOMETHING TO SEW

The Use of Leisure in a Year's Convalescence

By RACHEL MASON SIMPSON

"TEN days or a fortnight" the surgeon said. Well, I would take something to read and of course, something to sew. There is not much room so all big books were ruled out. The Shropshire Lad was small so he went into my bag. I never tire of the Shropshire Lad's company. I took a new Penguin of The Theban Plays in English translation, fine and light to hold. East Coker—just a few pages between paper covers—but two weeks would not be long enough to understand it, for, as a patient once remarked: "T. S. Eliot? by the time you've read his poems three times you think you are beginning to understand him, but the fourth time you see you are all wrong, and are back to where you started." Of course I would take Walter de la Mare's poems, they go with me on all my travels.

An Alternative

Then, something to sew! I took my petit point stool top for, though the wools were bulky they were light, and could even be housed under the pillow.

In the weeks that followed I was glad of all these. With all the bustle of a surgical ward around me I often found it impossible to concentrate on reading, then I resorted to my petit point work. It was not only a pleasure to work at, it was also convenient, for, being apparently engrossed in it excused me from joining in some of the conversation. While I did not wish to be disdainful I felt I had nothing interesting to contribute on appetite, bowels, quality and quantity of sleep or past operations.

Abusing Leisure

I still marvel, as I did then, that in a ward of twenty-four women patients only a very small number made any use of their enforced leisure. Reading was admittedly difficult, with doctors' rounds, students' rounds, dressing rounds, etcetera. But, accustomed to seeing long-stay patients studying, sewing, knitting, reading, I found it hard not to disapprove the topics of conversation. I felt some sympathy with the doctor's mother in O. Douglas's novel: "The less ye ken aboot yer inside the better."

I started on The Theban Plays an hour or so before I was due to go to the theatre but a hustling nurse (a nice girl though) seemed to think Omnopon would have no chance against Oedipus, so shestuffed him away saying I was supposed to be lying quiet. I took her word for it and "lay quiet"—but very conscious of the hideous striped jacket and white woollen stockings perpetrated on me that morning.

By the fourth or fifth day my piano stool top was growing. The lovely spray of lilac and one rose was done. I was rather pleased when the handsome clinical tutor stopped on his ward journey to say: "That will be a very beautiful piece of work."

At first when I got home it was fine just to lie and enjoy the quiet and privacy of my own room, to go over the familiar objects, the Utrillo picture that comes alive when the sun shines on it, the books, my work-bag, the cross-stitched cushion cover (begun on night duty), the tall fox-gloves in their vase in the fire place. Yes, it was luxury just to lie doing nothing but think, to hear harmless, easily interpreted sounds, to plan future reading, future sewing, future listening.

I re-read Francis Thompson and Walter de la Mare. In his beautiful preface to Francis Thompson's poems, Wilfred Meynell finds a "very definite reminiscence of the dissecting room" in Thompson's description of the heart:

"Arras'd in purple like the house of kings."

What a lovely line to flower from dissecting room study! I think we can trace too the sick man's gratitude for oblivion in his poem to 'The Poppy':

"The sleep-flower sways in the wheat, its head
Heavy with dreams as that with bread."

The fine thing about poetry is that you gather in dividends of pleasure as it were. You enjoy it when you read it, then some time the lines come back to you and you get pleasure unlooked for. Often, in the days of the black-out when I used to open the ward windows and see the snow-laden cypresses under frosty stars I thought of de la Mare's poem 'The Little Salamander':

"When I go free
I think 'twill be
A night of stars and snow
And the wild fires of frost shall light
My footsteps as I go;
Nobody, nobody will be there
With groping touch or sight
To see me in my bush of hair
Dance burning through the night."

Sometimes on starry nights I would walk along the verandah, seeing the moonlit sleeping figures in the wards. Half reluctant I would leave the clear cold world outside yet glad too of the bright light and warmth indoors.

"My candle a silent fire doth shed
Starry Orion hunts o'erhead
Come moth, come shadow, the world is dead."

De la Mare is a fine poet to read on night duty. What he says of music: "When music sounds gone is the earth I know, and all things lovely, even lovelier grow" would well be said of his own poetry: it makes lovely things lovelier. Even that old hoax counting sheep coming through a gate he turns into a lovely picture in Nod. That "drowsy flock" with their golden fleece against "a twilight dim with rose." Now I always think of them instead of the dirty grey old sheep that I used to count so disgustedly. The chance is, of course, that you will be so excited over the loveliness of the last verse that you won't even sleep for thinking about it:

"His are the quiet steeps of dreamland
The waters of no more pain,
His ram's bell rings 'neath an arch of stars
Rest, rest; and rest again."

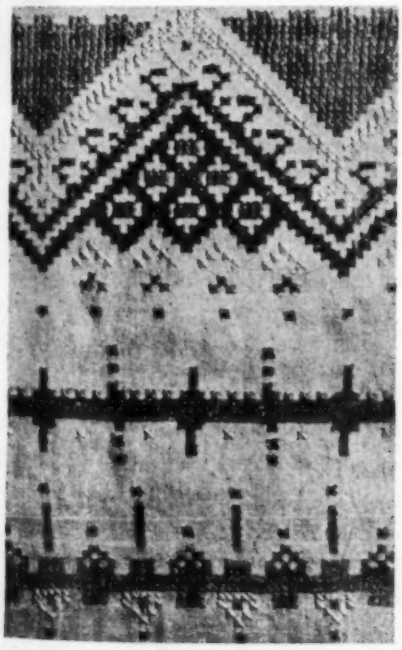
A GREEK DESIGN

These first few days when months of leisure stretched before me I thought of all I would do. I took out my transfers for embroidery and in my mind's eye saw them on various objects. The exquisite French Regency design must wait till suitable materials are cheaper, but a cushion, also of the Regency, is now done as is the little stool top in Jacobean work. Years ago I began a National cushion series. The first was a Greek design on white silk, a lovely but incredible tree bearing astonishing flowers, fruit and berries. The next was an Hungarian design in glorious reds, blues, torquoise and yellows in massed cross-stitch. The next was done in the early 1940's all scarlet cross-stitch on an unbleached dish towel (unlettered of course!) I do not know how I shall use the lovely transfer of Chinese design. It is panel shaped and has strange exotic flowers—lotus and blossoming branches of cherry and a glorious tailed bird. Some day, when silk is cheaper, I shall try to work it on oyster or duck-egg blue.

Accomplishment

On the whole I got most of my needlework plans accomplished. I was not so successful with my reading. I thought I would have time to read all The Golden Bough. But it was heavy to hold up in bed and anthropologist's tales can be nauseating if you are feeling squeamish. I decided to remain ignorant of a lot of primitive customs—at least for a little longer. But I discovered some motley cures. The charred remains of the yule log, for instance, was somewhere and at sometime believed a cure for pulmonary tuberculosis! I always meant to enlighten my doctor on this one but somehow I never remembered. The Arabs had a cure for phthisis—an infusion of red roses! Attractive I think, nicer than anything in Underwood's Manual of Tuberculosis.

Many nations and many ages have contributed to the ancient art of embroidery. The author of this article, who enriched her enforced leisure with fine sewing, started a national cushion series. Above is a Roumanian cross-stitch cushion in brilliant blue, red, yellow, black and green. Pattern detail is below. Opposite is a delicate Greek design



Photographs reproduced from The Needlewoman by courtesy)

The four volumes of War and Peace were too short for me. I was vexed when I had no more to read. I did get very mixed up with all the Rostofs and their relatives though, and they all seemed to have so many names to choose from.

Outdoors

Lying in the garden was entertaining but I found I got little reading or sewing done. Our garden is not secluded enough for any pursuit needing concentration. But it was pleasant seeing the willow tree against the sky, looking at cloud shapes through sun glasses, and seeing how perfectly a bee fits into little rock flowers and then methodically goes into each one.

Listening In

One disadvantage of lying out was that I could not hear the wireless, for ours is a temperamental set and likes its own natural habitat. One day it was brought up to my room so that I could better hear Mozart's Haffner Symphony. After much manoeuvering and twiddling of knobs the Symphony came out very faintly though deliciously, but, alas, at the opening of the second movement a neighbour began a Stakhanovite's orgy of stick breaking. In my bitterness I wondered what ritualistic bonfire they were preparing! I hoped it would smoulder like a church-yard elm.

Choosing Programmes

I have since heard the Haffner Symphony again, and lots more, but never enough. I have, in the past year, grown very fond of the B.B.C's schools programme on Monday afternoons called: The Orchestral Concert Series. Usually the work is repeated (I think) three Mondays so that I know I can look forward to it again. For a while Handel's Minuet from Berenice seemed to be the doctor's signature tune for he always appeared as it came on, then it changed to Bach's Sheep May Safely Graze. When I think of the music I have missed, and shall miss, I feel I have wasted half my life: "Had we but world enough and time."!

Scientific Film Census

In connection with the information service of the Scientific Film Association, a national survey is being made of makers, owners and users of scientific and similar films. Although information has been collected already from over four hundred scientific film-makers and distributing agencies, including the major companies, it is believed that there are many more whose names and films are known only to a limited number of people. The Association earnestly wishes to bring up-to-date its records on the documentary, instructional, educational and scientific film field, so that it may be in a better position to answer the many inquiries which are made to its Secretariat from day to day. The records which are being compiled will form an invaluable reference library of catalogues, lists and data sheets.

It has been found in some cases that the private producer of individual films is reluctant to make available the kind of information now being sought, for fear of being embarrassed by a large number of inquiries, arising out of the publication of data about this film or films. When desired, however, the Association is prepared to treat such communications as confidential for its own records.

The kind of statement which is now needed should give the maker's name and address, the title of the film, its gauge and length or running time, and preferably a brief synopsis. The rapidly growing importance of the scientific film has made a survey of this kind imperative, so that in conducting such an inquiry—which has never been attempted previously on this scale—the Scientific Film Association's Information Services Department believes that it is going some way towards meeting a very real and urgent demand. Further details of the work of the Association may be obtained from the Secretary, at 4, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.1. Tel: No: M U Seum 2403.

FOR THE STUDENT NURSE

State Examination Questions and Answers

GENERAL NURSING

QUESTION 1.—Give an account of the nursing care and treatment of a patient suffering from acute poliomyelitis.

During the acute stage of acute poliomyelitis the patient should be nursed with full infectious precautions as the virus causing poliomyelitis is present in the secretions of the naso-pharynx and in the faeces. Paper handkerchiefs or tissues should be used and burned after use. The faeces should be covered with formalin, 1 : 250, and left for one hour before emptying. Soiled linen should be similarly treated before sending it to the laundry.

The patient should be on a sorbo mattress, and the position in which she is nursed is of great importance from the onset of the disease. Paralysed limbs and affected muscles must be rested in the position in which they will waste the least. A small pillow under the knees will prevent hyperextension. A sand bag or cool stone water bottle may prevent dropped foot. If the arms are affected they should be supported in the position of abduction, and the hands placed in the mid-position. If the spinal muscles are involved the patient should be nursed in the supine position with a small flat pillow until a spinal support can be worn. When moving the patient the nurse must remember that the affected muscles are acutely painful in the early stage. A cradle may be used to relieve the weight of the bed clothes. A daily bed bath is given, and attention to all parts subject to pressure is necessary at least four-hourly. It may be necessary to change the patient's position a little every two hours. Heel rings, elbow rings and, unless the spinal muscles are affected, an air ring underneath the buttocks will help to protect the most vulnerable areas. The teeth are brushed twice daily, and mouth washes are given as required. Aspirin and Veganin tablets are usually sufficient to relieve the pain even in the acute stage. A sedative such a sodium amytal may be prescribed at night.

Passive movements of the joints and gentle massage are usually instituted as soon as the pain subsides, and well-padded back splints with foot piece or plaster of Paris gutter splints may be applied.

The bowels may be regulated by a small, simple enema on alternate days. Should retention of urine develop, catheterization will be necessary at eight or twelve-hourly intervals until bladder tone is re-established, when the patient should be catheterized once daily after emptying the bladder, to ascertain whether or not there is any residual urine.

The diet should be full, as far as the patient can take it, with extra fluids. During the acute stage the patient will require to be fed. A transient paralysis of the muscles of swallowing may develop, in which case nasal feeding may be necessary. Additional vitamins and iron may be prescribed.

The nurse must be prepared for paralysis of the diaphragm and intercostal muscles, the onset of which may be sudden and acute. The doctor should be informed immediately of any change in the rate or depth of the patient's respirations. Oxygen should be at hand for administration by B.L.B. mask, and the nurse should not hesitate to begin artificial respiration if the patient becomes cyanosed. A respirator of the Both or Drinker type should be available for all cases of acute poliomyelitis ; this should be within access of the patient with the mattress prepared. All nurses in a ward where there is a patient with this disease should be conversant with the procedure for putting her in the respirator without delay, and they should know how to use the hand pump. A strip of lint, 15 inches long, spread with vaseline or lanoline should be ready to put round the patient's neck to prevent friction. A stimulant, for example an injection of nikethamide 1-2 c.c., should also be prepared in case the patient collapses.

As soon as the patient's condition has sufficiently improved, she may be moved to a position where she can see what is going on in the ward. If she has to be nursed in the supine position, a mirror fixed to the head of the bed will help her to feel less isolated. The nurse should remember that infantile paralysis is regarded with dread by most people, and that a cheerful and hopeful attitude on her part will help her patient to face a long, tedious and often discouraging period of recovery in the way that will help her most. In most cases the subsequent treatment will be continued for many months.

Children of school age should commence lessons as soon as they are past the acute state, and throughout, emphasis should be laid on the possibility of complete recovery.

MEDICINE AND MEDICAL NURSING

QUESTION 2.—Define the terms thrombosis and embolism. Give examples of each and describe any steps which may be taken to prevent their occurrence

Thombosis is the formation of a clot in a blood vessel causing partial occlusion of the lumen of the vessel.

Embolism is a foreign body, circulating in the blood stream, for example a fragment of a clot, which may cause obstruction of a blood vessel.

Thrombosis most commonly occurs in the femoral or external iliac veins, it may also form in the cranial venous sinuses, especially in the lateral sinus. When arising in an artery it is most frequently the coronary or the cerebral arteries which are affected.

It is doubtful how much can be done by the nurse to prevent coronary or cerebral artery thrombosis but it may be advisable to ensure that the patient with arterio-sclerosis and hyperpyesia has adequate rest both mentally and physically and that all forms of excitement and strain are avoided.

Prevention of thrombosis in the veins of the legs, which may arise post-operatively may be assisted by the nurse reporting immediately any suggestion of complaint of pain in the calves of the legs. Nurses must also realize the importance of leg exercises to prevent venous stagnation, of breathing exercises and early movement, and must ensure that there is no mechanical obstruction produced by such equipment as pillows placed under the knees. The doctor may think that it is advisable to ascertain the clotting time of the blood pre-operatively, and may order a course of heparin or dicoumerol to be given if this time is increased above normal.

Cavernous and lateral sinus thrombosis may be prevented by early recognition and treatment of such conditions as boils and carbuncles of the face, cellulitis of the face, or mastoiditis; with early treatment including chemotherapy much may be done to prevent their occurrence.

The most common types of embolism are those which occur in the pulmonary vessels or in the cerebral ones. The substance causing the occlusion to the vessel may be a fragment from a blood clot, for example from a femoral thrombosis; a portion of infected material from the endocardium in bacterial endocarditis; a small collection of fat after such conditions as a fracture of the neck of the femur or an air embolism resulting for instance from a blood transfusion.

In the prevention of a pulmonary embolism following the diagnosis of femoral thrombosis the most important consideration is to ensure that the patient is at rest, and has few visitors so that he may be quiet, and free from worry. The doctor usually orders heparin to be given with saline intravenously by a drip method.

State Examination Questions
(October, 1949)

FINAL EXAMINATION FOR FEVER NURSES

The Board of Examiners by whom these papers were set is constituted as follows :—A. B. Christie, Esq., M.A., M.D., D.P.H., M. Mitman, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., Miss J. M. Blake, S.R.N., R.F.N., S.C.M., Miss E. C. White, S.R.N., R.F.N.

FEVERS

1. Describe a case of rubella. What are its possible complications ?
2. Define puerperal pyrexia. Discuss the nursing and medical care of a patient suffering from puerperal septicaemia.
3. State briefly what you know of the following :—(a) gamma globulin; (b) artificial respirator ("iron lung"); (c) hyperpyrexia; (d) Kernig's sign.
4. With what diseases are the following tests associated? Describe two of the tests and the interpretations placed upon the results :—(a) Mantoux; (b) Schick; (c) Widal; (d) Dick; (e) Paul-Bunnell; (f) Wassermann Reaction.
5. Describe the signs and symptoms of a case of Sonne dysentery. How does the disease spread in a children's ward and what special measures should be taken to prevent its spread ?
6. What are the main differences between the initial stages of measles and smallpox ? Describe vaccination against small-pox and enumerate any ill-effects associated with it.

FEVER NURSING

1. Describe the nursing of a case of laryngeal diphtheria in which tracheotomy has been performed. What matters of urgency may arise and how would you act ?
2. A baby is admitted to hospital suffering from ophthalmia neonatorum. Describe the nursing and treatment of the case.
3. What are the various methods of administering saline ? Describe one method in detail.
4. Discuss, with examples, the various routes by which drugs may be administered.
5. What precautions should be taken by a nurse to protect herself and others when nursing a patient suffering from typhoid fever ?
6. Describe in detail the nursing of a patient ordered absolute rest. Enumerate three infectious diseases in which absolute rest is commonly ordered.
7. For what reasons may catheterization be ordered ? Describe in detail how you would catheterize a female patient.
8. What do you know of the following :—(a) coma; (b) haemoptysis; (c) intubation; (d) cyanosis ?

Royal College of Nursing News

Membership forms may be obtained from the Secretary, Royal College of Nursing 1a, Henrietta Place, Cavendish Square, W.1, or from local Branch Secretaries.

College Council Election and Proxy Voting

Nomination Papers

Nomination papers may be obtained from the College early in January, and must be returned by February 1.

The following are the names of the retiring members of the Council of the Royal College of Nursing who are eligible for re-election if nominated (the figure in brackets indicates the number of attendances at the monthly Council meetings out of a possible maximum of 13) The names of the remaining members are also given.

Division (A). To represent nurses resident anywhere in England and Wales. Retiring Members: Miss M. A. Dawson (10), Miss E. J. Merry (8), Miss P. R. M. Rowe (10), Miss C. M. Thackray (10). Remaining Members: Mrs. A. A. Woodman, Miss E. M. Crothers, Miss H. Dey, Miss M. Houghton, Mrs. E. O. Jackson, Miss D. M. Smith, Miss F. Taylor, Miss M. B. Powell. Division (B). To represent nurses resident in Wales. Retiring Member: Miss W. M. Baugh (4). Remaining Members: Miss S. C. Bovill, Miss G. M. Lewis. Division (C). To represent nurses resident in the Northern Area of England. Retiring Member: Miss M. Jones (8). Remaining Members: Miss L. G. Duff Grant, Miss D. R Gibson. Division (D). To represent nurses resident in the Midland Area of England. Retiring Member: Miss D. Brown (9). Remaining Members: Miss C. F. S. Bell, Miss I. H. Sinnett. Division (E). To represent nurses resident in the Southern Area of England. Retiring Member: Miss G. Collingwood (8). Remaining Members: Miss M. E. Gould, Miss E. A. Opie. Scottish Section. Retiring Members: Miss J. Armstrong (5). Miss M. C. Marshall (6). Remaining Members: Miss C. E. Anderson, Miss R. Clarkson, Miss I Hamilton, Miss E. L. Liston. Irish Section. Retiring Members: Miss R. B. Macintyre (0), Miss M. Sparkes (2). Remaining Members: Miss F. E. Elliott, Miss K. Huey, Miss D. Melville, Miss S. B. Morgan.

Proxy forms are intended for College members in the following countries: Africa, except the Mediterranean seaboard; North and South America; except Canada, Newfoundland and the United States; Australia, China, India, Pakistan, Japan, New Zealand and the Straits Settlements. Other members abroad who have time to use the regular voting papers are requested to do so.

As each Council election approaches, letters are received from members in distant parts of the world regretting that there is not time between receiving their voting papers and the date of the election for them to take any active part in electing representatives to the Council. This is a difficulty which, although it cannot be wholly overcome, can be mitigated by the power these members possess of appointing proxies to vote on their behalf. One of the following courses is open to them :—

(1) To appoint a proxy to vote for such candidates as the proxy thinks fit.

This means that the proxy will exercise her judgment on behalf of the absent member and can vote for any of the candidates who are finally nominated.

(2) To limit the above proxy by appointing the proxy to vote in a particular manner.

For instance, the proxy would be instructed in the proxy form appointing her :

(a) to vote only for such of the retiring members of the Council as submit themselves for re-election, or
(b) to vote for certain of such retiring members of the Council and use her discretion with regard to the remainder of the vacancies, or
(c) only to vote for certain retiring members of the Council.

Other points of interest are :—

(1) The instrument appointing a proxy, (i.e., the form authorizing the deputy to record a vote) is valid only for 12 months, and is, therefore, sufficient for the Council election only. The date of the meeting, which is June 29, must therefore, be carefully filled in by the member who makes out the proxy form.

(2) A vote given in accordance with the terms of the instrument of proxy shall be valid notwithstanding the death of the member signing the instrument, unless an intimation in writing of the death shall have been received at the office of the Secretary before the meeting.

(3) For proxy to be valid it must bear the stamp required by law, i.e., an English penny stamp, or coupon of equivalent value from the local post office.

This year the names of members retiring by rotation and eligible for re-election if nominated are: English and Welsh Section.—Miss M. A. Dawson, Miss E. J. Merry, Miss P. R. M. Rowe, Miss G. M. Thackray. Wales.—Miss W. M. Baugh. North of England.—Miss M. Jones. Midlands.—Miss D. Brown. South of England.—Miss G. E. Collingwood. Scottish Section.—Miss J. Armstrong, Miss M. C. Marshall. Irish Section.—Miss M. B. Macintyre, Miss M. Sparkes.

By-law 10 under Article VIII, 20, of the College Charter requires those appointing a proxy to do so on a prescribed form which we reproduce below. Members abroad wishing to take part in the election should copy on a separate sheet of paper the wording below, filling in the blanks as required (if possible appending an English penny stamp). and post to the Secretary, Royal College of Nursing, Council Election, 1a, Henrietta Place, Cavendish Square, London, W.1, to be at the office at least 48 hours before the general meeting of members. At the same time she must notify the deputy mentioned in the proxy form that the authority for her to vote has been sent to headquarters, and ask her to attend at the College to receive her proxy form and to vote exactly in accordance with the instructions laid down by the absent member in the proxy paper.

Every instrument of proxy shall be, as nearly as circumstances will admit, in the form or to the effect following :—

"I.....(give name in full), being a member of the Royal College of Nursing.....(give address as on roll, or, alternatively to the address, give number on the roll of membership of the College) hereby appoint.....(give name and address as roll, or, alternatively, to address, give number of member on roll of membership of the College), or failing her.....(give name and address or number on roll) as my proxy to vote for me and on my behalf at the election by ballot of members of the Council of the College to be held on the .....day of.....1950 and at any adjournment thereof (*and in particular to vote for the following persons if nominated).....

As witness my hand this.....day of.....1950
Signature....."

* Cross out this clause if not required.

We hope College members in the above countries will avail themselves of this power to take part in the Council election by proxy.

Send the instrument or form to the Secretary and notify the deputy, who must, of course, be a member of the Royal College of Nursing.

NURSES' APPEAL COMMITTEE

This is Christmas week and we have re-received a splendid gift of £100! This, with all the other very kind donations makes the weekly total the highest we have reached this year. We are most grateful for all that we have received in donations and other gifts and for the many kind letters bringing good wishes for the fund. Once more we thank you all most cordially for giving this good cause the strong support it needs.

Retirement

Former members of the General Hospital, Birmingham, will be interested to learn that Miss B. Parker, Senior Sister Tutor, is retiring early in the new year after twenty-six years' service in the hospital.

They will recall her never failing patience and the thorough tuition which she gave to successive generations of nurses, whilst always holding before them the example of her devotion to the highest ideals of her profession.

Readers of the Nursing Times will join in the good wishes of her present colleagues for happiness in her future life.

Progress

An address given at the Second Winter Conference for the National Association of State Enrolled Assistant Nurses by Dr. R. LUXTON, M.R.C.P. (London), Medical Officer, Department of Education and Medical School of Manchester University

Above: His Worship the Lord Mayor of Manchester declares the second winter conference of the Association of the State-enrolled Assistant Nurses open. Seated (left to right) Mrs. M. D. Dixon, Chairman of the Manchester Branch, Miss S. G. Lange, F.S.A.A., Dr. M. Warren, President and J. D. Benton, Esq., S.E.A.N., Chairman of the Council, Miss M. G. Butcher, S.E.A.N., Vice-Chairman, of Council, Mrs. M. Stocken, the General Secretary of the Association. Right: the audience in the Mayor's Parlour in Manchester, listening to the Lord Mayor

AT the Second Winter Conference of National Association of the State-enrolled Assistant Nurses, held in the Lord Mayor's Parlour in the Town Hall Manchester, recently, His Worship the Lord Mayor, Alderman Robert Moss, J.P., opened the conference. Dr. R. Luxton, Medical Officer, Department of Education and Medical School, University of Manchester, gave the following address at the evening session at which Professor Topping, Director of the Department of Social Medicine, University of Manchester, presided :—

I must first congratulate you on three things :—1 : The formation of the National Association of State-enrolled Assistant Nurses, and the way in which your Association is thriving :—2 : The affiliation of your Association to the Royal College of Nursing. I consider this to be a sign of real progress for you and a development of advantage to the Royal College of Nursing and to the whole nursing profession, and 3 : a special congratulation on the reputation which you, as assistant nurses are winning for the quality of your nursing care for patients. I have spoken to several people who have close touch with your work, and their judgment confirms my own impression that your practical nursing is, taken in general, of first class quality and of great value to all concerned.

Aspects of Progress

On the question of progress there are many points one could raise, such as advancement in education and technical equipment, increased salaries, and improved conditions of service; there is the question of status, of organization, and of the expansion of your Association and the enrolment of more nurses. Each has its proper place, but real progress for you, as nurses, is what I want to talk about this evening. Part of what I shall say has already been said before, but there are some things which can never be said too often.

What is it in nursing which calls out the very best in a woman and draws her into the nursing profession ? Though men are increasingly taking up nursing as a career, and excellent nurses some of them make, women have always been, and probably always will be, the essential mainstay of nursing. There are many fundamental differences in the psychology and emotional make up of men and women. The difference for us however, is that men are interested in conquering their environment, in acquiring knowledge, in understanding things and how they work, while women are fundamentally interested in people. If you listen to the casual conversation of the men you will find they talk about motor cars, politics and football matches, and finances—high or low. Whereas, if you listen to women they talk about babies, obstetrics, and relations, and Mrs. So-and-So across the road, i.e., it is people they talk about. Women have a natural instinct to create, nourish and sustain new life, and their lifelong dominating interest remains in people.

House or Home ?

Up to the beginning of the nineteenth century this interest in people was expressed mainly in caring for the people in her home. We all have a thousand ideas about what home means, but at the heart of all these ideas lies the simple conception of home as a set of human relationships in which people are united to one another by ties of affection and loyalty; where people are trying to build the best into one another and to draw the best out. If our experience of home is not that, the place we live in is merely a house, and not a home.

But during the nineteenth century the pioneers of modern nursing produced a new idea. They asked : why shouldn't a woman have a profession, why should she not be independent, and develop a sense of responsibility for the world in which she lived as well as towards her ?

These nursing pioneers set high standards and they had a hard time. They had to stand a lot of abuse by men in tailcoats, with side-whiskers and rigid conversation, for those were the days when man dared to say : " no " to woman. Worse still, these pioneers of nursing were ridiculed by women who thought them immodest ; but they stuck to their convictions, and they have created an undying tradition for all the nurses of the world.

All this suggests that the underlying incentive which draws women into nursing is not primarily an intellectual interest in disease, nor a desire for status and security, but an urge to create sound people, soundly related to each other, and to bind them together into a sound community. This I believe was one of the main incentives which, a 100 years ago, animated nursing pioneers like Florence Nightingale. In many of them there was a firm basis of religious conviction, out of which a passionate desire for the welfare of human beings naturally arose. What they produced is not merely an organization of nurses, it is an organism, a living, growing thing with a purpose and a goal, a dynamic force springing from a fundamental interest in people.

What has happened during that hundred years ? Starting with this passionate interest in people, the nursing profession steadily grew in numbers and importance, despite opposition and in face of appalling conditions. As knowledge of medicine and surgery expanded, and more could be done for sick people, the demand for knowledgeable and trained nurses, and for larger numbers of nurses, increased. We have seen this particularly during the last ten years; there are hundreds of beds in hospitals which cannot be used at this present moment purely because there are not enough nurses.

Science and Art

The intellectual training of nurses in their profession became increasingly important as nurses became more and more essential to the carrying out of the technique of treatment in addition to their personal care of patients. Nurses were therefore brought into touch with the two main aspects of their work (aspects which every doctor meets in an even more intense degree) that is to say the science of medicine (the intellectual knowledge of diseases and techniques of treatment) and the art of medicine (the caring for people—the personal relationship).

The scientific side of our work has expanded tremendously during recent years. During my time as a doctor I can think of changes which have seemed like miracles; for example, in the past, out of 300 people affected with pneumonia 75 died on one year. M and B 693 had changed all this, as had penicillin, which came later. Operations, too, have been made safer with penicillin, while insulin has changed the prognosis of the diabetic; where death was at one time inevitable, the patient can now lead a fairly normal life.

All these are the benefits of science, the fruits of the many conquests of man's mind over his environment. I want to point out, however, that we have only discovered these things, we have not created them. Penicillin has been there for millions of years, waiting to be used in the treatment of pneumonia. Just think of all the amazing things which exist now, but which are still waiting to be explored by the human mind. It makes us realize that our knowledge is like an island of light in a great sea of darkness. It should help to make us humble, and I'm afraid so many of us react by feeling important.

Science Out of Perspective

I believe that all this vast and valuable knowledge we have acquired is making us lose perspective. We are beginning to worship knowledge as such. We have discovered atomic energy, and it is frightening us out of our wits because we can control the atom, but we can't control human nature. Science will never save us, though it may destroy us. This very phase of scientific achievement is associated with man's growing confidence in himself. During the past fifty years the world has seen enormous changes in the fundamental values accepted by civilization, for along with scientific progress we have seen a materialism sweeping across the world. Now the essence of materialism is that things matter more than people, at heart, therefore it is violently opposed to the conception of each individual person being of infinite value as a person. To the professed materialist, the individual is only of value in so far as he is a member of the State, or a propagator of an ideology. In this country there are not very many who openly profess materialism as their philosophy, but most of us practice materialism consciously or unconsciously, and to a greater or less degree. I find myself talking not of John Smith, the man in bed 7 who suffers from cholecystitis, but of the "gall bladder in bed 7," and soon John Smith becomes to me a gall bladder! Materialism makes the employer think of his men as "hands," and the workman only of his pay packet and his "rights." You see the same thing in the housewife whose house is so absolutely spick and span, that everybody is miserable because there is no sense of home. Everything in the home matters except the people.

The Impact of Materialism

I suppose human nature has been shot through with materialism since the beginning, but it is only in the last fifty years that we have seen the startling development of materialism as an aggressive world force. This necessarily makes its own impact on your nursing profession. As can be expected from an age of materialism, where things matter more than people, the science of nursing has grown; but the art has suffered. For the art of nursing springs from the conception that people are all important. I notice that in medical students, the art of taking the history and examining the patients seem to be less important than taking multiple laboratory specimens. What should be learned in practical dealings with people in the ward is learned by rote from the text book and sometimes the idea is not grasped at all.

As assistant nurses I believe your great line of progress lies in the art of nursing. By all means have the science of nursing, the intellectual side of it, but remember, that the intellect, though a wonderful lieutenant, is a very bad captain.

What are the main lines by which you will make progress in your art? I would suggest five "Cs": character, craftsmanship, co-operation, combination, combat.

Character—

Character is what you are. It has nothing to do with what you have or where you come from. It has a great deal to do with what you are aiming at, your goal, the main line on which you are fighting to make progress. We all have character. It is not just personality or individuality. These are but the waves on the deep ocean of character. Sound character is the same thing as integrity. It is sometimes said that every man has his price. I don't believe it. It may be true of some, or even of most, but not of all. Whether you have your price or not depends upon what you are living for and what you believe to be real progress.

Everybody is sensitive to character, and it is character the patient trusts. You know how you can be impressed by personality, by a driving or brilliant doctor or sister or matron. That is a superficial assessment of the mind. A patient detects character with his feelings rather than his mind, and when it is a question of life and death it is surprising how penetrating the eye of instinct and feeling can be. Doctors and nurses all need real character and integrity. Treating disease is not the same as healing people. The one needs only what you have in your head, the other needs everything you are. To the nurse or doctor of character this fight to care for people can become the dominant passion of life. The main conflicting interests and urges and desires can be unified and the dynamic force of your whole nature can find its fullest experience in this great task. Have you ever seen the effect of a powerful magnet on a disordered irregular heap of iron filings? They rearrange themselves like magic along regular lines of force. The disordered and conflicting impulses in our natures can find harmony and expression if we allow them to be acted on by the great incentive which is at the very root of the nursing profession. This brings inner unity to a person, and people with inner unity and integrity are rare.

You are the same person in uniform or in mufti. A nurse's professional standards can never be high if her personal standards are low.

—The Indefinable

I am not going to tell you how to perceive character. It is indefinable. When you are a patient you soon know whether your nurse or doctor regards you as a person or merely as a case. You nurses can give confidence at once to patients. You can make them feel at home; your facial expression, the neatness of your dress, your willingness to help, your thoroughness, your finger nails, the fact that you are not a clock watcher, and that your patient is more important to you than your off duty are all matters of individuality. Your alertness and sensitiveness to a patient's needs can become extremely acute. You may remember that during the war we learnt that a mother might sleep through the noise of a land mine dropped a few hundred yards away, and yet awaken at once if her baby whimpered.

Craftsmanship means more than being a master of your profession; if you are a craftsman you cannot possibly do a shoddy piece of work. Craftsmanship always aims at quality, not quantity. It is an expression of character. I sometimes feel that one outstanding feature of our present day standards is the shoddiness of material things; they may look well on the surface, but they will not stand the test of use or even of close examination. A nurse who is a craftsman does the meanest task well because she is inspired by a great idea. An old chap was once working in the corner of a quarry and was asked by a rather cynical bystander "why work so carefully when you are paid only £3 a week for chipping stones?" The old man looked up and said quietly: "I'm not just chipping stones; I'm building a cathedral."

The reputation of assistant nurses is that their patients very rarely develop bed sores, and that although they have to do most exacting personal nursing it is done well. That is craftsmanship.

It has been truly said that if you don't fall for something you will fall for anything.

By cooperation I mean team work. We talk rather glibly about the team spirit, and of course, you see a superficial team spirit in every football match, i.e., a number of people working towards a common goal. I once heard a parson say that real team work requires everything there is in Christianity. What he meant was that a proper team spirit dissolves selfishness, jealousy, laziness and criticism, and replaces them by an overwhelming urge for real friendship, and a united attack on the common enemy—in your case human suffering. You introduce an entirely new factor into the situation when you make team work possible. Different people approach the same problem from different angles, and so if people can work together there can be a kind of stereoscopic study of a problem. This often sheds much more light on the difficulty than the contemplation of one facet by one person.

Penicillin—Idea and Pattern

Do you remember how we got penicillin? Dr. Alexander Fleming had been interested for many years in anything which would kill bacteria. Through all his routine work as a bacteriologist, which may have seemed humdrum at times, he had an alert eye for anything which destroyed the germs of disease. One day he noticed that on some culture plates a colony of a mould had appeared, and in the area immediately around this mould colony the colonies of staphyloccocus were ghostlike and much thinned out. Now many bacteriologists must have noticed a similar sort of thing but Fleming was alert to the significance of this curious sight. He set to work and extracted a substance from this mould which he called penicillin and which he used for ten years in his bacteriological work to discourage the growth of certain organisms. The matter would have rested there, but for the fact that he told others of his observation and Professor Florey turned his mind to that finding. He felt that if penicillin could be extracted in large enough quantity it could be tested against germs which do actually infect animals and man, and might be used to cure these infections. It was a long and laborious task, and if you look up the original literature you will find the first contribution on the clinical use of penicillin was made by a team of seven people from Oxford in 1941. The team included a physician, a surgeon, a chemist, a biochemist, a bacteriologist, and a pathologist. They proved that penicillin was of a practial use clinically; then their ideas had to be taken up by firms who could produce enough penicillin to meet the clinical needs of the world. You will remember how precious penicillin was four years ago; now it is one of the sharpest and most versatile weapons in mankind's attack on disease. Fleming's keen brain conceived the idea; Florey's team produced the pattern by which the idea could be applied to human infections, and once the pattern was made it was easy to multiply it on a world scale.

This illustrates the effect of team work on discovery in the science of medicine. The same principle applies to the art of medicine and nursing. Create team work on a ward between the nurses and doctors, and especially the patients, and the whole atmosphere changes. Work that was boring becomes fascinating; the difficult becomes easy, and the tough colleague or patient becomes considerate and helpful. Many elements go into the creation of teamwork, and if you analyze them they are the same as those which create character. In fact you may say that where teamwork fails, look for failures in character, One important thing is to be able to see the situation from another person's viewpoint; what is obvious to you may be absolutely the opposite to him.

Combination

For nurses to combine in a National Association of Nurses is a natural step and a right step forward; it leads to teamwork on a National scale. There are some national associations which seem to be out for the selfish interests of their members, and have little regard for the needs of the community as a whole. But that is not the basis on which your National Association of Assistant Nurses is founded. Reading your aims and objects of Association I find that your Association is to represent your real interests and to further a right spirit throughout the nursing profession. I believe your real interests lie in cultivating the art of nursing as an expression of your primary interest in people. The spirit you foster is one of teamwork based on friendship, and I would say to you all: take a keen interest in your Association and its activities. Attend the refresher courses; get to know other nurses; train up others in the art of caring for people. Encourage the formation of schools for pupil assistant nurses, and recruit others into your National Association, and into the ranks of assistant nurses. The treasurer might even add: "Pay your subscription," but I am quite sure you have all done that!

These are all means to an end. They are not ends in themselves; you should regard your Association as an instrument which can appeal on a national scale to that great instinct in women which makes them put people first, that desire to make the world into a home for people. There is so much idealism in people which never finds expression and which dies of frustration. Idealism which never gets down to earth generally ends in noise and neurosis. As an assistant nurse all that is finest in a woman can find practical expression.

The word combat means to fight. If a thing is worth while, it is worth fighting for. It is easy to get discouraged and feel one is only an individual, and a small and unimportant one at that, but what matters is not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of the fight in the dog! Progress is always against gravity; against inertia. You will only make progress by fighting for it. If you are moving along without a struggle you can be quite sure you are sliding downhill! The world is such that you have to fight for the things you believe in. What we need in medicine and nursing are teams of fighters. The unexpected happens when teamwork and a fighting spirit are brought to bear on a problem.

You must fight to become craftsmen; fight for teamwork with the people in your ward; in your hospital; fight for your National Association.

Laboratory in a Jungle

Finally I want you to be quite clear that in making progress along these lines you will be striking a blow at the root of most of the trouble in the world. The world is no longer a home for mankind. It is becoming a fearful laboratory built in the jungle. Nations walk in fear of the science and savagery of their neighbours. The world is in desperate need of all that women can give from their hearts. We need desperately the sense that people matter. Your profession sprang out of a recognition of the infinite value and importance of every person. Your art as nurses springs fundamentally from your sense of the value of people. Keep an absolutely clear sense of the destiny of your profession. You not only stand for the fact that people matter more than things, but you demonstrate it. Don't be afraid of a passion for this. It often takes the right sort of passion to cure the wrong sort of passion. There are many things for which you and your Association should fight — for status, for right conditions of service, for the correcting of unfair discrimination. But in working for these things do not lose perspective. You are now members of one of the greatest professions in the world, and you stand for something of first importance to the world. That has been said so often that you tend to take it for granted; we take so many vitally important things for granted and only miss them when, suddenly, they are not there any longer. Health is one example. In this materialistic age you nurses may suddenly wake up to find that your main incentive is dead.

Conclusion

To sum up: first, the primary incentive which draws women into the nursing profession is a sense of the great value of every individual as a person. Secondly, the nursing profession is an organism, not just an organization. It is a living, growing society and one which has a purpose and a goal.

In the third place, the National Association of State-enrolled assistant nurses is a natural expression of the life and development of this organism, the nursing profession. Your association needs the keen interest and support of all assistant nurses.

Mankind is making astounding discoveries in science, but because of advancing materialism we are rapidly losing the art of personal relationships. The world needs desperately to be brought back to a sense of the great value of every one as a person. You, as assistant nurses, can give a great lead in that direction by cultivating the art of nursing. Finally, I suggest five main lines of progress in cultivating the art of nursing; these are craftsmanship, co-operation, combination, combat. If you have a passion for your art, if you keep a sense of perspective and never mistake means for ends, I believe your National Association will leave its mark on the history of mankind.

ABOUT OURSELVES

King Edward's Hospital Fund for London

Courses for Ward Sisters

The preparatory courses are open to State-registered nurses who have had at least a year's experience in hospital after qualifying. The senior course is intended for sisters with at least five years' experience. Candidates should be nominated by Management Committees or Boards of Governors of hospitals in the four Metropolitan Regions, to which they will return as sisters after taking the course. The costs of tuition and residence are defrayed by the King's Fund. Application forms and nomination forms may be obtained from The Principal, The Staff College, 147, Cromwell Road, S.W.7.

The amended dates are: Senior Ward Sisters:—March 6 to April 1. Senior Ward Sisters.—April 11 to May 6. Junior Ward Sisters and Senior Staff Nurses.—May 15 to August 26. Junior Ward Sisters and Senior Staff Nurses.—September 18 to December 23.

London's District Nursing Directory

The Central Council for District Nursing n London has now published a Directory of District Nursing and Streets List for London which gives the streets and places in the County of London in alphabetical order, and, by means of an index letter or number, indicates the District Nursing Association for that street or area, giving also the address and telephone number, and whether the Association also undertakes domiciliary midwifery. This Directory and Streets List is a revision of the 1939 edition and will be found most valuable by all concerned with patients needing domiciliary care in the County of London, particularly, for example, almoners, general practitioners and health and social welfare workers. The names of blocks of flats have been included and addresses of metropolitan city and borough Councils are given. Other points of information such as ambulance and car service arrangements are also included. The Directory can be obtained from the Central Council for District Nursing in London, 25, Cockspur Street, S.W.1., price 3s. post free.

Retirements

Miss A. Hill

Miss A. Hill, who has recently retired from her post of senior sister tutor at Withington Hospital, Manchester, will be greatly missed, as she has held that position since 1925. At a party held for her, Miss Hill was presented with a cheque by Dr. Greenwood, who expressed the gratitude felt by all her students for the teaching and guidance they had received. Miss Hill went to Withington Hospital in 1913, and during the first world war—when the hospital was taken over by the military authorities—Miss Hill was mentioned in despatches on October 23, 1917. Health and happiness was wished for Miss Hill in her retirement.

Miss B. Midgley

Miss B. Midgley, matron of the Haywood Hospital, retired at the end of November, and has taken up a post as housekeeper-matron at Brownhills High School for Girls.

Miss M. E. Redman

Miss M. E. Redman, the matron of Luton and Dunstable Hospital, was presented with a cheque for £1,000 guineas on her retirement after 21 years service.

Miss Munro

Miss Munro, retired district nurse of Auchterderran, was recently guest of honour at a social gathering held by Auchterderran Nursing Association, when a presentation of over £113 was made to her in thanks for her long and faithful service.

Miss E. Swinbank

Miss Ethel Swinbank, matron of the Children's Hospital, Birkenhead, since 1937 is retiring owing to ill health at the end of the year.

Miss Swinbank has been connected with the nursing profession for 36 years. Previous to her appointment, at the Children's Hospital, Birkenhead, she was assistant matron, at the Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital, Heswall, Cheshire.

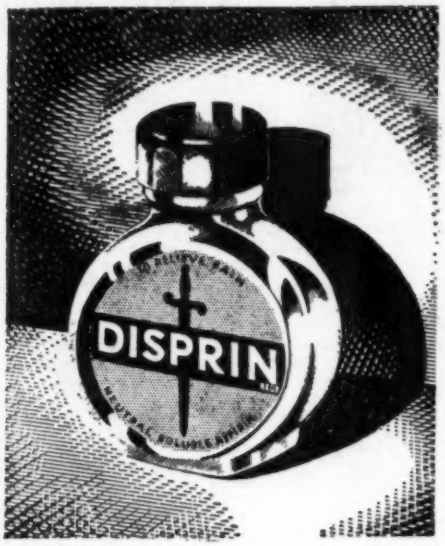
The problem was to neutralise aspirin and to make it soluble. The problem has now been solved.



Aspirin is acidic, sparingly soluble, and for many subjects a gastric irritant. By contrast, its calcium salt is neutral, soluble and bland. Unfortunately, however, calcium aspirin as ordinarily presented is unstable, and thus, sooner or later becomes contaminated with the breakdown products, acetic and salicylic acids. In 'Disprin' the problem of providing pure calcium aspirin in stable and palatable form has been solved. Extensive clinical trials show that patients can take Disprin in large dosage and over prolonged periods without suffering the disturbances, gastric and systemic, that so commonly attend intensive aspirin therapy.

The part protein plays in speeding up convalescence

THE EARLY STAGES of convalescence are often hampered, as every nurse knows, by weakness and lack of appetite. This is because protein stored in the tissues is being used up by the body, thus retarding its power of recovery.

To prevent this debilitation, protein should be supplied, in a palatable form, to repair the weakened tissues. As the patient is often unable to take protein in a solid form, Brand's Essence, a tempting, digestible essence of animal protein, is strongly recommended by doctors for hastening recovery at this difficult time.

Brand's Essence has four important advantages in cases where the patient needs nourishment but is unable to take solid food. They are :—

1. It is soluble animal protein of high biological value.
2. It promotes gastric secretion.
3. It is extremely palatable.
4. As it can be taken as a jelly or a liquid, it is easy to ingest, digest, and absorb.

Help your patients by recommending Brand's Essence.

Winter Woods

"IT'S all right in the summer time". How often the words occur in any discussion of country living, and usually the speaker has little experience of the country in winter, with its lovely tracery of bare boughs and its frequent cool bright sunshine which seems to evoke colour as no summer sun can do. The jade lichen on the tree trunks, the fox-red undercarpet of a beech wood and the royal blue shadow where frost lingers in the furrows, seem enamelled in their intensity of colour. If you do not know these things, and more "intimate delights" of the winter countryside, put on your strongest shoes, take a few sandwiches and a piece of chocolate, and a walking stick, and try a walk in the nearest bit of real countryside. For those in London or the Home Counties we suggest this walk through the beech woods of Buckinghamshire :—

Out to Hampden

The Way Back

The road to the right leads to The Rising Sun, a pretty little inn overlooking the woods and famous for George, a sociable goose, and so on through the woods to Wendover, but that is for the longer days. Now, before dusk, follow the road to the left down to the main Hampden Road which runs left again back into Great Missenden ; or, if time allows, return by the footpaths again, for this is a walk which becomes richer with every repetition.

SOME NEW FILMS

The Rocking Horse Winner

This film needs a column and not Films in Brief to do it honour ! A selfish extravagent woman, a weak husband, a sensitive child starved of affection and a groom are the chief players. How the boy "senses" winners of races and how, with the groom, he wins money which he plans to give his mother makes a notable story. The groom, played by John Mills, is a most lovable character. Other stars shining are Valerie Hobson, John Howard Davies, Ronald Squire and Hugh Sinclair. Please do not miss this picture.

After Midnight

Partisans in Italy during the war are betrayed in their secret headquarters and the place is raided, causing the deaths of 27 villagers for aiding them. The survivor revisits the village after the War to avenge the lives of his two assistants ; a man and a girl—by discovering their betrayer. This film is a little confusing, but it is exciting and well acted. The stars are Alan Ladd and Wanda Hendrix.

Something to Read

Brensham Village

By John Moore. (William Collins Sons and Company, Limited, 10-12, Bow Street, London, W.C.2 ; price 12s 6d.)

Brensham is four miles from Elmbury, the village described in "Portrait of Elmbury" by the same author and in some respects the character of the two books are identical. In Elmbury, beneath the bluster of the life of its people, a dreamlike quality prevails; Brensham is a much smaller village and its people are ordinary, forthright, folk with no more than the farmer's interest in the beauty of the country.

Wooden Toy-making

By Winifred M. Horton, with illustrations by M. McLeish and the author. (Dryad Press, Leicester; price 6s 6d.)

This book is intended by the author for the guidance of teachers giving elementary instruction in Arts and Crafts and should serve its purpose admirably. The construction of a number of traditional types of simple wooden toys is described so clearly that even those cursed by the possession of more than the normal number of thumbs will be inspired to endeavour, if not to achievement. Many variations on the main themes are suggested in the delightful illustrations, the quality of which belies the illustrator's insistence—in the preface—that an efficient product is not the aim in teaching. Though the white deal recommended as the main material is now denied to the unlicensed general public, there are still orange boxes to be had very cheaply.

In Parliament

Recently in the House of Commons, Mr. Henderson Stewart (Fife East, Liberal National) asked the Secretary of State if he was aware that the maternity beds in St. Andrews Cottage Hospital were to be closed down on the direction of the East Fife Hospital Board; this decision was opposed by almost every public and private interest in St. Andrews and district; that it was contrary to the terms of the National Health (Scotland) Act, 1947, Section 6(4); and, in view of the unanimous wish of the community for the maintenance of those beds, what action he proposed to take.

Mr. Woodburn: "I understand that the Board of Management have proposed to use these beds for other purposes in view of the substantial maternity provision now available at Craigtoun Hospital three miles from the town. The Regional Hospital Board are, however, in consultation with the various interested parties, and I am bringing the honourable members' representations to their notice."

Mr. Harold Davies (Leek, Labour), asked the Minister of Health on December 8, if he was aware of the shortage of maternity accommodation to serve cases in the Leek urban area; and what steps he was now taking to provide additional accommodation.

Mr. Blenkinsop (Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Health): "The Minister understands that the Regional Board are considering increasing the number of beds by revising the use of hospital accommodation in the neighbourhood."

Sir David Robertson (Streatham, Conservative), asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, what was the population of the Island of Stroma, how long had people there been without the services of a qualified resident nurse; what was the total amount per week of national insurance contributions paid by the residents; what National Health Services were provided on the Island; whether a doctor visited the Island regularly each week; and what were the other responsibilities on the mainland of this doctor.

Mr. Woodburn replied that the population of the Island was about 95, and there had been no resident nurse since May, 1949. As at most tenpence of any National Insurance contribution went towards the cost of the National Health Service, the income under this head in respect of insured residents on the Island probably did not exceed £2 weekly. All residents on the Island were of course entitled to the full range of National Health Service facilities, including transport to hospital where necessary. Family doctors services were provided by the doctor at Canisbay, on the mainland. He visited the Island when required and could be summoned by wireless telegraph and telephone. He had just under 1,000 patients in all on his National Health Service list.

Mr. F. Noel-Baker (Brentford and Chiswick, Labour), asked the Minister of Health recently whether he would arrange with the Regional Board to make available to the Governors of Queen Charlotte's and Chelsea Hospitals a part of St. Luke's Hospital for teaching purposes.

Mr. Bevan said in reply that he was aware of the need for additional accommodation at the Queen Charlotte's and Chelsea Hospitals. It would probably be impossible to make any part of St. Luke's Hospital available for this purpose, but he was considering other possibilities.

Sir E. Graham-Little, on December 1, asked the Minister of Health what were the total costs of the lawsuit unsuccessfully brought by him to gain possession of £6,000 bequeathed by Mrs. Alicia Kellner to the Royal Cancer Hospital.

Mr. Bevan: "No legal proceedings were instituted by me. The matter came before the court on a summons taken out by the executor of Miss Kellner's Will to construe its provisions in the light of the provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946. I am not in a position to state the costs of the proceedings, which were ordered to be paid out of a proportion of the estate and have not yet been taxed."

Mr. R. Robinson (Blackpool South, Conservative), asked the Minister of Health why chloromycetin was no longer available to patients under the National Health Service in cases where it was prescribed by their doctors.

Mr. Blenkinsop, the Parliamentary Secretary replied: "To ensure that this scarce and expensive drug is used to the best advantage I have arranged to purchase all available supplies and to distribute them through Regional Hospital Board Centres. The Boards have discretion to make supplies available through the distribution centres to practitioners in domiciliary practice in exceptional cases."

Mr. Touche (Reigate, Conservative), asked the Minister of Health whether he was aware that the use of the Reigate and Redhill Infectious Diseases Hospital for leprosy meant that the only isolation hospitals available in this area would be at Bletchingly and Westcott with a maximum of fifty-six patients, and as the area concerned had a population of 145,000, hospital accommodation would only be available at the ratio of 0.33 beds per thousand of the population; and how this compared with the average provision of accommodation in the country.

Mr. Blenkinsop said in reply: "The honourable member is under a misapprehension since beds in other fever hospitals in the region are available to meet the needs of this area.

Mr. Tolley (Kidderminster, Labour), asked the Minister of Health why the Mid-Worcestershire Hospital Management Committee were advertising for a whole-time Church of England minister as chaplain for the six local hospitals, at a salary of £500 per annum plus a rent allowance and subject to superannuation benefit, when, in the past, local ministers had willingly done this service free; and if he would give further consideration to the saving of this expenditure, and allow the voluntary system to continue.

Mr. Blenkinsop: "Chaplains have held paid hospital appointments widely in the past, including two in this group, and this advertisement accords with the general policy framed after consultation with the churches. Voluntary visiting of patients by their own ministers is also continuing in the future as in the past.

Correspondence

Amendment to Article 6

Material in your correspondence columns shows that a large number of people have been misled by the inaccurate reports published in the press concerning the action taken by the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland on Article 6 of the Draft Covenant on Human Rights. The National Council was asked at the end of September for an opinion on this before the end of October. As the Executive Committee was meeting on October 14, the material was circulated, with a covering letter emphasizing its importance, the agenda having already gone out. After a full discussion the resolution as published correctly for the first time in your issue dated December 24, was sent to the International Council of Nurses.

At the Grand Council meeting on November 24, this action was reported and an opportunity given for discussion. Miss Dey asked a question but did not propose any resolution, nor did any resolution arise from it. I did not ask for "a proposer to support Miss Dey's resolution" as stated in the Nursing Times of December 3; after a short discussion there was a lengthy pause following which I again asked if the Grand Council wished to confirm the action of the Executive Committee, showing that I did not support the view that its action must be supported if it were contrary to the convictions of the delegates. It was then proposed, after a further pause, that the action of the Executive Committee be approved; the motion was seconded and carried by 89 votes to 25.

Miss Johnston, writing on December 17 on procedure, had evidently not seen the agenda of the Grand Council meeting and had been misled by statements in the press. The Grand Council was not asked to act on the Amendment to Article 6. This was not on the agenda—as action had been taken in October. No affiliated society had asked that the matter be postponed or be put on the agenda of this meeting. As is constitutionally correct, the Executive Committee took action and reported it to the Grand Council. The Grand Council had the right and were given full opportunity to discuss or censure it if they wished. In fact they approved it.

The Amendment to which your readers take exception was an attempt to protect not only the individual but also the health of the community against uneducated, selfish and irresponsible persons in case the need should arise. It is a very difficult problem. Knowing as we should, from a study of the history of medical advances, the difficulties that pioneers like Jenner, Lister and Simpson had to meet, it is important for us to ensure that in protecting the individual, we do not expose the health of the community to risks which it is impossible to foresee.

K. F. Armstrong,
President, National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

A Protest

As an organisation which has taken particular interest in the Draft Covenant of Human Rights, may we express our dismay at the action of the executive committee, confirmed by the Grand Council of the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland concerning Article VI of the Covenant.

This Article which prohibits the physical mutilation or medical or scientific experimentation against a person's will, was drawn up to safeguard the liberty of the subject and is in accord with the rights of human personality and with the traditions of the nursing and medical profession.

Various national councils of nurses have proposed amendments. The French amendment added the words "not required by his state of health." To this amendment, full of sinister possibilities the executive committee of the National Council of Nurses added two further amendments to insert "both mental and physical," before the word health, and to add "or necessary for the protection of the health of the community."

One wonders whether British nurses have any memories at all of the raison d'etre of the article. One hopes that these views will be repudiated by the rank and file of nurses as they have been by the Royal College of Nursing.

P. C. Challoner,
Honorary Press Secretary
St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance.

A Further Protest

I should like to add my protest to the other letters written in the Nursing Times concerning the amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Covenant of Human Rights.

If a patient thinks he or she may be "experimented" upon, nurses will lose the faith, trust, and devotion of their patients which has been built up by them through many years.

To those of us who follow Christ this amendment is contrary to His teaching, and I can only hope that many nurses throughout the country will feel it their duty and responsibility to make known their attitude.

M. S. Arthur.

The Health Visitor's Function

I have been reading the correspondence in your columns concerning the future of health visitors, and the desirability of linking the service up with that of the district nurse. As an English health visitor who is now working in the United States as a public health nurse where this type of service is in operation, may I offer the following comments?

The nursing cases take up so much time that the sphere of the nurse's influence is drastically reduced, and, therefore, her activities in the field of health education are very much curtailed. I do not reach nearly as many people in this type of work as I did as a health visitor.

Secondly, nursing cases are not mainly from among younger people whom it is so vital to educate, but among older people whose need from the point of view of the future is not so vital.

My present experience leads me to ask the following questions:—1. Do the advocates of a combined service really expect one person to function effectively as district nurse, midwife, health visitor and school nurse? 2. If so, how much time would the nurse be able to devote to the various clinics which are so essential for health education? 3. Since most health visitors are also school nurses, how would a lengthy inspection with the school doctor fit in with nursing cases which need daily visits, or with an emergency call?

Our health visiting service, with the accent on health rather than sickness, seems to me to be far superior, from the point of view of health education, to that on this side of the Atlantic. Many health visitors take up the work because they feel the call to teach a positive way to health through preventive medicine. The combined health visitor and school nurse has a very big part to play in helping to give the nation a healthy outlook. Take away her distinctive role, and her field will become too restricted to be effective.

Margaret M. James,
S.R.N., S.C.M., Health Visitor's Certificate, Public Health Nurse with Tacoma City, Washington, U.S.A.

Health Visitors' Salaries

Could some information please be given regarding the proposed new scale of salaries for health visitors. A few vague announcements have been made. Since some time has elapsed since the Whitley Council discussed this matter I feel that we, the people concerned, should be informed of the decisions made, if any.

If, as some people surmise, the economic crisis has interfered with an immediate increase, then why cannot we be told? Isn't it unfair, that health visitors, who surely find the increased cost of living more difficult to cope with than hospital staffs, should be left until almost last? Student nurses, the newcomers into the profession, have benefitted for some time.

After being in the nursing profession for close on twenty years, I feel very strongly about this. The disparity between the student nurses' total remuneration, and that of the commencing salary of a health visitor is ludicrous. Surely we can hardly be blamed for deciding to change to another branch of the profession later in one's professional career. Why cannot experience count in deciding on a commencing salary? There is so much discussion at the moment regarding a wider field of training; let us have some comment too, on a scale of salary more in keeping with the status of a highly qualified professional woman. I hope that these views will have some support.

N. Oliver.

A MATRON'S THANKS

I wish to express my sincere thanks for all the kindness and skilled attention which I received whilst a patient in the Nurses' Sick Bay at Crumpsall Hospital, Manchester. I cannot speak too highly of the skilled attention bestowed on me by the physicians and surgeons, also the matron and nursing staff. It was a very kind thought which provided such a delightful place for their nurses in my old training school.

A. Hopwood, R.R.C.

GOOD NEIGHBOURS NEEDED

To ensure that no elderly sick people occupy hospital beds through lack of someone at home to care for them, Bolton and District Hospital Committee has appealed for the formation of "good neighbour groups."

Coming Events

National Association of State-enrolled Assistant Nurses.—The Grand Annual Ball will be held on January 10, 1950, from 7.30 p.m., to 1 a.m. Tickets are 7s. 6d. inclusive.

Royal Salop Infirmary, Shrewsbury.—The student nurses are producing a pantomime "The Babes in the Wood" for patients, staff and public. The script has been written by a friend of the nurse who is producing it. There will be three evening performances on January 5, 6 and 7, and past members of staff will be very welcome.

Warmth for WINTER

STETHOS ANNEX CAPES AND CLOAKS FOR NURSES

As woollen materials are in very short supply, Hospitals should consider now their requirements of Capes and Cloaks for winter. PRIZES AND AWARDS

The prizewinners of the Royal Orthopaedic Hospital, Birmingham, form a happy group after the ceremony

The Royal Orthopaedic Hospital, Birmingham

Dame Elizabeth Cadbury, M.A., J.P., who is well-known and loved by all the nurses at the Royal Orthopaedic Hospital, the Woodlands, Birmingham, presented their prizes, medals and certificates recently, in the Rabone Hall. Miss R. Ballard received the Gold Medal, as the best all round nurse; Miss D. Morris, the Silver Medal. Miss O. Lacey, Matron's Prize for being the best practical senior nurse. Professor C. F. V. Smout, Sub-dean and Tutor of the Faculty of Medicine at the Birmingham University in an address to the nurses, said that people to-day feared most that they would be exploited unless they showed dissatisfaction. He hoped nurses would not let their profession be dragged into the political arena or become commercialized. Nursing was the noblest profession open to women, and the way to attract the young nurse was not with inducements of a material nature, but rather to make it known that more than a million people were condemned to suffer and perhaps die each year because insufficient women entered the nursing profession. If that could be made known there would soon be sufficient nurses.

Miss W. B. Mountain, in her report, referred to the improvements in the training school of the hospital. J. B. Leather, M.A., F.R.C.S. (Edinburgh), was in the chair for the afternoon.

Fulham Hospital Prizegiving

Frank H. Elliott, Esq., D.L., J.P., Chairmand of the South West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board, presented prizes and certificates at the Fulham Hospital recently. Mr. Elliott opened his address by saying: "I am just a worker in the hospital service as you all are". He told the nurses how the hospital had been built in 1884 and the nursing school founded there in 1904.

The hospital motto was, Famam extendere factis—"to spread your reputation by your deeds", and Mr. Elliott thought it very apt. He advised that too much store should not be set by success or failure in the classroom. The nurse, he declared, was "made" at the bedside of the patient where she had a unique opportunity for observing human nature. Mr. Elliott continued: "If your training has meant anything to you, you have learned the value of the individual and your own value." Miss B. Ryan, Matron, in giving her report, thanked all the staff in all departments of the hospital. She said that this had been a successful year for the nursing school as 48 nurses had passed the State final examination. Dr. R. J. Harrison, consultant physician, said that the hospital now had 330 beds. There were a total of 5,000 in-patients during the year, the average stay of a patient in the hospital being 19 days. The number of out-patients was increasing and about 1,500 were seen each week. There was now rehabilitation of old people in the hospital.

The three silver medals for the hospital final examination during February, June and October, 1949, were presented to Miss B. T. O'Callaghan, Miss M. P. Kenny and Miss E. F. Pilcher. Votes of thanks were given by Miss M. W. Hooper, senior sister tutor and Mr. A. J. S. Laver, to the Chairman, The Right Honourable Lady Latham. A student nurse and a staff nurse proposed the votes of thanks to Mr. Elliott.

Horton Hospital, Banbury

The 21st birthday celebrations of the Horton General Hospital at Banbury took place recently. Dr. J. C. Wharton who was chairman at the prizegiving, thanked all the staff and the sisters for their loyal service and said that the hospital and nursing school were developing very rapidly. Matron, Miss M. W. Loader, said that the hospital had been founded with 20 beds by two members of the Horton family in 1872. Since then it had grown tremendously and the General Nursing Council now recognized the Elm's Obstetric Unit and the Pines' Isolation Hospital as within the training school. The vacancies for the Preliminary Training School were filled well ahead. She said that many of the nurses who had left the hospital had taken post-certificate courses.

Lord Elton, who is now living near Banbury, presented the prizes to the nurses. He said that the primary object of a nurse should not be merely to acquire a competent technique, but to develop the right mental and spiritual attitude towards her patients. He said that no good had ever been achieved unless it sprang from some individual heart and that the greatest contribution that most of us could make to the reform of the world was the reform of ourselves. To the patient, the nurse should always be a particular individual with a particular individual relationship towards him.

After tea at the hospital, the day ended with true Guy Fawkes' celebrations—fireworks and a bonfire followed by a dance.

Archway Group Prizegiving

At the Whittington Hospital, recently Lady Uvedale, Chairman of the Archway Group Hospital Management Committee, presented prizes to nurses of the Archway Group of Hospitals.

In her address, Lady Uvedale admitted to an early ambition to be a nurse, and said that she could therefore understand the pride which must be felt by the prizewinners on this day. Nursing was a calling that made great demands; but to anyone who had the necessary qualities of a good nurse, answering these demands would be a reward in itself. Lady Uvedale pointed out the similarity between the qualities required in nursing and those in marriage and motherhood. She did not doubt that nurses who later entered married life would find their nursing experience helping them to be successful wives and mothers.

Mrs. E. E. Bull, Chairman, Saint Mary Wing House Committee was chairman at the ceremony. She urged perseverance in nursing and recalled how the legendary Whittington became Lord Mayor of London by "turning again." She added that she did not suggest that each nurse present would therefore become three times matron. She sincerely hoped, however, that many of them would rise high in the nursing profession.

Gold medals were awarded to Miss M. T. Heavey and Miss P. W. Redmond. Votes of thanks to Lady Uvedale and Mrs. Bull were proposed, and bouquets presented to them by the nurses. The afternoon was ended with an enjoyable tea dance, attended by the staff and their friends.

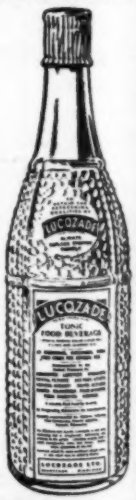
In case of extreme debility...



Where there is extremely low vitality and loss of tone in the bodily functions it is a standard practice to maintain strength by giving glucose. If this be offered in the form of LUCOZADE the favourable pyschological response it evokes will play a valuable part in aiding the patient — for in LUCOZADE you have a delightfully refreshing beverage. There is a complete absence of the sickly nauseating taste which so often discourages the patient who is offered glucose in any of its ordinary forms.

Johnson's Baby Lotion is second only to Johnson's Baby Powder in the care and treatment of infants' skin. It is a smooth, white, antiseptic oil-in-water emulsion that reduces effectively surface bacteria, urine irritations, and other skin eruptions. It leaves a discontinuous film that allows the skin to function normally.

Mothers who receive authoritative help in the care of infants use Johnson's Baby Lotion especially at nappie changing times. They find that a mop-up with Baby Lotion is the one sure way to do an oft-repeated task hygienically without risk of urine rash, just as they know the value of Johnson's Baby Powder after baby's bath.

A palatable whole grain rye bread prepared in a form virtually free from moisture, so that complete mastication is assured. Ryvita can be eaten as an alternative to other breads. Many find that its characteristic flavour stimulates appetite.

RYVITA

'They're all fast asleep, Sister . . .'

She's not the only nurse who's discovered the soothing goodness of Bourn-vita. Nurses everywhere know that Bourn-vita's ingredients—malt, milk, cocoa, sugar and eggs—are wonderful for inducing sleep and building new reserves of energy. That's why so many busy nurses themselves drink a cup of Bourn-vita at the end of a long stretch of duty.

Manual No. 1

SIR HAROLD E. WHITTINGHAM
K.C.B., K.B.E., F.R.C.P.

SIR STANFORD CADE
K.B.E., C.B., F.R.C.S.

In view of the changes and advances in medicine since the last edition of the British Red Cross Society's First Aid Manual No. 1 was produced, it was necessary to rewrite most of the book to bring it up-to-date. The subjects dealt with have been arranged, as far as practicable, in the order of frequency with which they are encountered by the first-aider and their importance as life-saving measures. New chapters on miscellaneous emergencies, action at the incident, and first aid in Civil Defence have been added.

Profusely Illustrated with pictures, some of which have not appeared in previous editions. 3s. net.
